SLOVENIA

- While the Constitution provides that not more than two-thirds of the members of elective or appointive bodies shall be of the same gender, you report that the National Assembly is made up of 290 elected representatives and 47 women county representatives, while the Senate consists of 47 elected members and 16 nominated women. We understand that these women's positions are in addition to any elected among the 290/47 members of the Assembly/Senate, and that only 16 women were elected as MPs in March 2013. While this is the highest number in Kenya's history, it falls well below the constitutional quota of one third, which would require 97 women to hold seats in the National Assembly, and 16 in the Senate. Can you please explain how the constitutional quota is being applied in parliamentary and other elections?

How have these recommendations been integrated into the Water Bill, the draft National Water Policy, and the Water master plan?
