

FOLLOW UP TO THE PREVIOUS REVIEW

1. At its third Universal Periodic Review (UPR) in May 2018, Cuba supported 224 of the 339 recommendations¹ made by other states. Most of the recommendations supported by Cuba were related to promoting economic, social, and cultural rights, including the rights to health² and education,³ and to addressing gender equality,⁴ and gender-based violence.⁵
2. Cuba also supported several recommendations related to the rights of the child,⁶ and the rights of persons with disabilities,⁷ and concerning discrimination based on race⁸ and sexual orientation and gender identity.⁹ In 2022, Cuba legalized same-sex marriage following a referendum, an important step towards fulfilling the rights of LGBTIQ+ people.¹⁰
3. Cuba also accepted to “ensure that prisoners are treated with dignity and humanity”¹¹ in line with the Standard Minimum Rules for the Treatment of Prisoners.¹² Despite this, since the last review Amnesty International has received various reports of ill-treatment in prisons.¹³
4. As in previous years, many of the recommendations which did not enjoy the support of Cuba (113 in total) were broadly related to fostering greater respect for the right to freedom of expression and peaceful assembly.¹⁴ Regrettably, since the last review, Amnesty International has documented a crackdown on these rights, most notably illustrated by the ongoing detention of hundreds of people involved in nation-wide protests on 11 July 2021.¹⁵
5. Amnesty International laments that Cuba did not support recommendations to stop arbitrary detentions,¹⁶ “to end arbitrary detention of political activists”,¹⁷ to end the harassment and arbitrary detention of human rights defenders and media workers,¹⁸ or to “immediately and unconditionally release all prisoners of conscience”.¹⁹ Cuba also failed to support a recommendation to end short-term and pre-trial detentions and house-arrest.²⁰ Unfortunately, since Cuba’s last review, Amnesty International has continued to document all these practices, which are all inconsistent with international law.
6. While Cuba did support several recommendations to expand internet access,²¹ it rejected recommendations to “remove internet restrictions”²² and rejected a series of recommendations related to providing greater press freedom²³ and ending harassment and repression of journalists.²⁴ Since the last review, Cuba has frequently disrupted the internet, as a tactic to limit freedom of expression and assembly²⁵ - as it also did prior to 2018²⁶ - and subjected independent journalists to frequent surveillance.²⁷

Promotion and protection of human rights

7. Since the previous review, Cuba has ramped up its sophisticated machinery of control over freedom of expression and assembly in a way not seen in almost two decades.
8. In the past four years, Amnesty International has named at least 13 prisoners of conscience - people imprisoned because of their political, religious, or other beliefs who have not used or advocated violence.²⁸ These emblematic cases represent only a tiny fraction of the total number of people who likely deserve the designation.
9. Following country-wide protests in July 2021 over shortages of food, medicine, constant electricity blackouts, Covid-19 measures, and the state’s historic policy of repression, Cuba has sought to claw-back control and a culture of fear²⁹ that was punctured during the protests by criminalizing nearly all those who participated in the protests and by passing even stricter criminal laws.

THE NATIONAL HUMAN RIGHTS FRAMEWORK

10. Consistent with previous reviews, despite a suite of recommendations to do so,³⁰ Cuba also failed to agree to ratify key international human rights instruments.³¹
11. During the last review process, Cuba also merely noted a suite of recommendations to increase oversight of its human rights record, including recommendations to allow independent human rights monitoring at detention sites,³² and to grant unhindered access to human rights mechanisms.³³ It further noted any recommendations to “recognize human rights monitoring as a legitimate activity”, to “provide legal status to local human rights groups”³⁴ and to remove barriers for the functioning of civil society.³⁵ Cuba also failed to support recommendations to establish an independent national human rights institution in line with the Paris Principles.³⁶
12. In December 2022, a new Penal Code came into force which risks further entrenching long-standing limitations on freedom of expression and assembly³⁷ and is a chilling prospect for independent journalists, activists, and anyone critical of the authorities.³⁸
13. The new law retains provisions of the Penal Code which were both heavily relied on to prosecute 11 July 2021 protesters, and which have been used for decades to silence dissent. It also increases minimal penalties for these provisions. For example, “contempt”, “public disorder”, and “resistance” now carry minimum penalties of six months in prison to a year and/or a fine, compared with a minimum of three months to a year in prison and/or a fine under the previous Penal Code. Similarly, “insulting national symbols”, which includes defiling or other acts that show contempt for the flag or national anthem, now includes a penalty of imprisonment for two to five years or a large fine or both, compared with a penalty of three months to a year or a fine under the previous criminal code.³⁹
14. The Penal Code, under Article 120.1, also allows anyone who “endangers the constitutional order and normal functioning of the State and the Cuban government” to be punished with imprisoned from four to 10 years. Additionally, Article 143 of the new Criminal Code stands to further stifle the ability of civil society organizations, activists, and independent journalists to operate in the country, by prohibiting any receipt or use of finances that are deemed to “fund activities against the Cuban state and its constitutional order.” Anyone found guilty of being in possession of funds deemed to be used in this way faces a punishment of four to 10 years in prison. It also retains the death penalty for a series of crimes.⁴⁰

THE HUMAN RIGHTS SITUATION ON THE GROUND

Independent human rights monitoring

15. In line with Cuba’s failure to accept recommendations related to the scrutiny of its human rights record,⁴¹ Cuba has failed to allow any international media or international human rights organizations to monitor the recent trials of people detained in the context of the 11 July protests. Cuban authorities have ignored public requests by Amnesty International to attend the trials.⁴²

Restrictions on freedom of expression and peaceful assembly

16. Authorities have never responded to Amnesty International's letter requesting information about how many people were detained in the context of the 11 July 2021 protests.⁴³ However, in the wake of the protests, Amnesty International documented a range of human rights violations.
17. Relatives of those detained and detainees who were later released widely reported a range of violations of due process rights and the use of incommunicado detention. According to information received by Amnesty International, in the days after the protests, law enforcement officials targeted young people that they suspected of having participated, dragging them from their beds, sometimes without shoes or clothes, and carting them off to prisons in police vehicles. Many complained that prison conditions were cramped, damp, and unhygienic, that no social distancing or other Covid-19 prevention measures were taken, and that rarely were they allowed outside.⁴⁴
18. As of January 2023, more than 700 people remained imprisoned for participating in the July 2021 protests,⁴⁵ according to Justicia 11J,⁴⁶ a civil society group who have been tracking the number of people imprisoned. Many were charged and sentenced for "public disorder", or other crimes inconsistent with international standards, such as "contempt." Others were charged with more severe crimes for throwing bottles and stones and given sentences for up to 30 years.⁴⁷
19. In September and October 2022, there were further protests over power outages following the passing of hurricane Ian.⁴⁸ Amnesty International received further reports of deployment of police and military, including cadets, to repress the protests.⁴⁹
20. In the period under review, Cuba has also subjected artists, academics, and other alternative thinkers to frightening levels of surveillance.⁵⁰ Journalists and activists frequently face police presence outside of their homes, and a constant threat of arrest, which has a serious impact on their ability to work, and their right to privacy, and amounts to an unlawful restriction on freedom of movement, and in some cases house-arrest.⁵¹
21. By way of example, over a space of two weeks in December 2020, Amnesty International researchers gathered testimony from activists and independent journalists describing police surveillance details outside their homes, risk of arrest should they try to leave, and restrictions placed on where they could go. The organization's researchers and its Crisis Evidence Lab analysed and verified the location of photos and videos documenting this surveillance outside the homes of approximately 11 activists, some who were living with other activists. In most instances, the photos showed one or more marked police cars parked on the street corners outside the activists' homes. In other instances, plain clothed individuals, who activists believe are also state security officials, appear in the photos, often on motorbikes. In photos received between 1 and 13 December 2020, Amnesty International researchers observed 24 different marked police cars parked outside of their homes, and several activists had at least five different police vehicles outside their home over that same period.⁵²
22. Similarly, in February 2023, following reports of constant harassment and physical surveillance, state security officials appear to have detained former prisoner of conscience Josiel Guía Piloto in his home in Havana. At the time of his detention, he was hunger striking.⁵³

Prisoners of conscience

23. As of January 2023, three activists named prisoners of conscience by Amnesty International remain in jail.
24. Among those is José Daniel Ferrer García, activist and leader of the unofficial political opposition group "Patriotic Union of Cuba", who was detained after trying to attend the demonstrations in Santiago de Cuba with his son. He left his house and walked past the state security officials who constantly monitor him, but other law enforcement officials stopped him a few meters ahead. For his attempt to join the protests, José Daniel Ferrer García was charged with “public disorder,” however, he has not received a trial and remains in prison. In 2020, following a different trial for other charges and tainted by irregularities, José Daniel was convicted to four-and-a-half years of house arrest.⁵⁴ According to documents seen by Amnesty International, due to the charges of “public disorder” related to the July 2021 protests, a Provincial Tribunal in Santiago revoked his house arrest in August 2021, obliging him to pass that previous sentence in prison. Since his detention in 2021, José Daniel Ferrer García has been held with limited access to the outside world, in conditions which could facilitate torture or other ill-treatment.⁵⁵

25. Luis Manuel Otero Alcántara, a Black Cuban artist and a leader of the San Isidro Movement - a diverse group of artists, journalists, and activists – was also detained in the context of the 11 July 2021 protests.⁵⁶ Luis Manuel Otero Alcántara had been vocal in his opposition to Decree 349, a dystopian law passed in 2018 which seeks to limit artist expression.⁵⁷ Before his imprisonment in July 2021, Luis Manuel was subjected to constant surveillance and harassment and multiple arbitrary detentions. On 2 May 2021, state security officials took Luis Manuel from his home, where he had been on hunger strike protesting the confiscation of his artworks by the authorities. He was forcibly taken to a hospital and denied access to the outside world.⁵⁸ On 11 July 2021, Luis Manuel posted a video online, saying he would be taking part in the demonstrations. He was arrested before reaching the place where the protest was taking place and taken to Guanajay maximum security prison, where he remains.⁵⁹ In June 2022, he was sentenced to five years in prison, after a trial behind closed doors.⁶⁰
26. Maykel Castillo Pérez, a Black Cuban musician, a leader of the San Isidro Movement and one of the authors of “Patria y Vida”, a song critical of the Cuban government that was adopted as a protest anthem, also remains in prison. On 4 April 2021, Maykel was walking in Havana when police officers questioned him and attempted to arrest him but desisted in the face of complaints from other passers-by who considered the action unjust. On 18 May, security agents arrived at his home and arrested him. In June 2022, he was sentenced to nine years in prison.⁶¹ In January 2022, the UN Working Group on Arbitrary Detention also concluded that Castillo Pérez had been arbitrarily detained and said that the Cuban government should release him immediately.⁶²

Internet interruption

27. Since the last review, Cuba has expanded the internet, as it accepted to in the previous review,⁶³ but controlled and interrupted internet access in politically sensitive moments, consistent with its failure to accept recommendations to “remove internet restrictions.”⁶⁴
28. Following protests in July 2021, the authorities disrupted the internet, in violation of international human rights law. On 11 July, there were countrywide internet outages and then a decrease in traffic until 12 July, according to network measurements gathered by Kentic.⁶⁵ Cuba also regularly blocked instant messaging apps such as Whatsapp, Telegram and Signal.⁶⁶
29. Internet outages were also reported following protests in September 2022,⁶⁷ which in turn impacted the ability of journalists to do their work.⁶⁸
30. According to the Open Observatory of Network Interference (OONI), the technology used to carry out the blocking has become increasingly sophisticated, particularly since 2019, when the organization also noted blocking of media sites during the Constitutional Referendum.⁶⁹

Economic, social, and cultural rights

31. Since the last review, the economic situation in Cuba has reportedly deteriorated, marked by increasingly long lines for food and other basic goods, such hygiene products, and medicines.⁷⁰

32. The number of people leaving the island has also risen significantly. Between October 2021 and September 2022, more than 224,000 Cubans made their way to the United States, a significant increase compared with the same period in 2020-2021, when just over 39,000 Cubans arrived in the US, according to US government data.⁷¹

RECOMMENDATIONS FOR ACTION BY THE STATE UNDER REVIEW

Amnesty International calls on the government of Cuba to:

National human rights framework:

33. Ratify, without delay, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, and the Optional Protocol to the Convention Against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman, or Degrading Treatment and Punishment.

Independent human rights monitoring:

34. Immediately grant access to independent human rights organizations, including Amnesty International, to monitor and observe trials of human rights defenders and those detained during protests.
35. Extend invitations to the UN Special Rapporteurs on the promotion and protection of the right to freedom of opinion and expression, on the rights to freedom of peaceful assembly and of association, and about human rights defenders and facilitate their visits by the end of 2024.

Freedom of expression, peaceful assembly, and association:

36. Immediately initiate genuine dialogue with human rights defenders, independent journalists, and other actors, including those critical of the authorities.
37. Immediately and unconditionally release all those detained for the exercise of their freedom of expression and peaceful assembly.
38. Amend provisions of the new Penal Code which have been historically used to criminalize human rights defenders, independent journalists, activists, artists, or other people critical of the authorities, such as "contempt", "public disorder", and "resistance", and which now carry more severe minimum penalties.
39. Amend or repeal provisions of the new Penal Code which stand to further limit freedom of expression, such as Article 143, which prohibits receipt of finances that are deemed to "fund activities against the Cuban state and its constitutional order," and Article 120.1 which allows anyone who "endangers the constitutional order and normal functioning of the State and the Cuban government" to be punished with imprisoned from four to 10 years.
40. Stop subjecting human rights activists and independent journalists to surveillance and arbitrary detentions, including de facto house arrest.

Prisoners of conscience:

41. Immediately and unconditionally release all people who have been imprisoned solely for the peaceful exercise of their rights to freedom of expression, association, or peaceful assembly.

Internet interruptions:

42. Desist from using internet interruptions that are incompatible with international human rights law to clamp down on freedom of expression and assembly.

Economic, social and cultural rights:

43. Ensure that the economic, social and cultural rights of the population are met, and address their need for greater access to food and medicine.

⁴⁷ In one case, 21 people, many in their early twenties, were formally charged with "sedition" and given sentences ranging from nine years, for among other things, aiming to alter the socialist order (alterar el orden social socialista), inciting violence, breaking Covid-19 social distancing regulations, and throwing stones and flammable bottles. As is common in judgements in Cuba, the sentence described some individuals as having ties with anti-social people (se vincula con elementos antisociales) or poor relations with their neighbours and indicated if they worked or not. Such language is often used to describe people deemed critical of the Cuban authorities but should have little bearing on a criminal case.
