I. Summary of the proceedings of the review process

A. Presentation by the State under review

5. The delegation of the state under review engaged in the current 27th session of the working group of the UPR in a spirit of constructive dialogue. While considering the UPR a dynamic exercise, it reaffirmed its commitment to working closely with government and non-governmental partners to fully implement the recommendations.
6. It stated that Brazil was going through a challenging moment that imposed short term sacrifices and that required structural reforms, which were vital to generate jobs and ensure equal opportunities for all, in full respect for human rights. In view of the gravity of the economic crisis inherited by the government, Brazil had approved a Constitutional Amendment aimed at balancing public finance while preserving Brazilian social programs. Without this adjustment, persistent fiscal imbalance could lead to a vicious cycle of low growth, high inflation and chronic unemployment, undermining the ability of the state to finance public policies that benefit the poor and vulnerable groups.
7. Faced with the rapid change in the demographic profile of Brazilian society, the government sought to guarantee the long-term sustainability of the social security system. In doing so, it was committed to respecting acquired rights and ensuring transitional rules. The labor reform, in turn, aimed to promote investment and job creation. These were reforms that were being debated extensively and democratically in the National Congress.

8. Concerning adequate housing, the "My House My Life Program" had been expanded. It aimed to reduce the country's housing deficit by financing the purchase of the first property by low-income families. The properties financed under the Program complied with sanitation, safety and accessibility guidelines.

9. Brazil considered that popular participation was one of the pillars of the democracy and rule of law. This was the logic underlying the tradition of thematic conferences promoting participation in public policies. Brazil held the 12th National Conference on Human Rights in 2016, in addition to a series of other sectoral conferences.

10. Following a voluntary commitment on the occasion of the first cycle of the UPR, the use of social indicators had allowed better monitoring and evaluation of public policies, becoming a concrete tool for the progressive realization of human rights, through the National System of Human Rights Indicators. In addition, the government remained committed to the implementation of the 3rd National Human Rights Plan, in force since 2009. In 2013, the National Observatory for human rights was launched. It made information about the implementation of the National Plan available for monitoring, by both government agencies and civil society, through an online platform.

11. Brazil reiterated its commitment at the highest level to fight discrimination of any kind. In this regard, 20% of vacancies in civil service exams at the federal level were reserved for Afro-Brazilians. In universities and technical schools, 50% of vacancies were allocated to students from public secondary schools, with the distribution of vacancies between Afro-Brazilians and indigenous people based on the proportion of such groups in each community. The "Living Youth" program included preventive actions that promoted a sense of belonging and autonomy, besides countering violence. An affirmative action program concerning members of the judiciary had also been proposed.

12. The delegation reiterated its condemnation to violence against indigenous peoples. It highlighted that the Integrated Plan for the Implementation of the National Policy for the Territorial and Environmental Management of Indigenous Lands sought to ensure indigenous occupation and management of their lands. There were 462 indigenous lands already demarcated, besides other ongoing demarcation processes. The Brazilian government was also committed to conducting consultations, according to ILO Convention 169. The São Luiz hydroelectric project on the Tapajós river was a case in point.

13. On public safety and the justice system, in addition to strengthening long-term preventive measures, such as education, income distribution and income generation programs, Brazil was committed to ensuring that the fight against crime was carried out with respect to human rights, as reflected in the National Security Plan. Brazil had invested in training police forces, guaranteeing access to justice, strengthening Public Defenders, and fighting impunity in cases of excessive use of force. It was also worth mentioning initiatives by both the Public Prosecutor's Office and the Police Forces towards prioritizing investigation, as opposed to repression.

14. In addition to cooperating with the sub-federal states to expand prison vacancies as a way to fight overcrowding, the Federal Government had encouraged alternative penalties for minor offenses, as a way to reduce the incarceration rates. In addition, special task forces, in coordination with the Public Defender's Office, had been established to assess the situation of prisoners willing to return to family life. The Custody Hearings Promotion Program had led to a 50% reduction in provisional detentions.

15. In 2013, in compliance with OPCAT, Brazil established the National System to Prevent and Fight Torture, which comprised an independent body composed of 11 experts, with a legal competence to inspect places of detention. The aforementioned Committee had already carried out unannounced visits to more than 50 places of detention in 11 states.

16. The Brazilian government had regulated the Program for the Protection of Human Rights Defenders, currently handling about four hundred cases. In addition to the immediate protection of their physical integrity, the Program sought to mobilize public agencies to investigate and prevent violations. When the states did not have a framework for protection, the Federal Government included defenders in its program.

17. The National Truth Commission had acknowledged deaths and enforced disappearances perpetrated in the past, having located 33 bodies, besides identifying state actors as perpetrators of violations. Its report presented 29 recommendations, focused mainly on research and redress actions, as well as non-recurrence.

18. The 2014 FIFA World Cup and the Rio 2016 Olympic and Paralympic Games were held in Brazil without incidents and left a significant legacy. Specific policies to protect the rights of children and adolescents and to fight racism in the context of such events were put in place.
