Human Rights Council
Working Group on the Universal Periodic Review
Thirtieth session
7–18 May 2018

Summary of Stakeholders' submissions on Cuba*

Report of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights

I. Background

1. The present report was prepared pursuant to Human Rights Council resolutions 5/1 and 16/21, taking into consideration the periodicity of the universal periodic review. It is a summary of 224 stakeholders' submissions¹ to the universal periodic review, presented in a summarized manner owing to word-limit constraints.

II. Information provided by stakeholders

A. Scope of international obligations and cooperation with international human rights mechanisms and bodies²

2. At least 37 submissions highlighted that Cuba had ratified numerous international human rights instruments.³ The National Human Rights Commission of the Dominican Republic (CNDH-RD) recommended that Cuba ratify the international treaties to which it was not yet a party.⁴ In addition, Joint Submission 10 (JS10) recommended that Cuba recognize the competence of treaty bodies to consider individual complaints.⁵

3. Around 15 submissions recommended that Cuba ratify the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights.⁶ Five submissions recommended that Cuba ratify the Optional Protocol to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment.⁷

4. The United Workers' Confederation (CUT) noted that Cuba had acceded to the Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, Especially Women and Children, supplementing the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime, in 2013 and that it had ratified the International Labour Organization (ILO) Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) in 2015.⁸

* The present document was not edited before being sent to United Nations translation services.

5. Christian Solidarity Worldwide (CSW) recommended that Cuba ratify the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court.⁹ Joint Submission 5 (JS5) recommended that it join the inter-American system for the protection of human rights and ratify the American Convention on Human Rights.¹⁰

6. At least 40 submissions highlighted Cuba's positive cooperation with universal human rights mechanisms.¹¹ Joint Submission 2 (JS2) noted that, since the last periodic review, the Special Rapporteur on trafficking in persons, especially women and children, and the Independent Expert on human rights and international solidarity had visited the country.¹² Amnesty International (AI) noted that Cuba had not accepted other visits requests and had rejected previous UPR recommendations to extend a standing invitation to the UN Special Procedures mandate holders.^{13, 14} Around 10 submissions recommended that Cuba extend invitations to different Special Procedures.¹⁵

B. National human rights framework¹⁶

7. Around 17 submissions indicated that Cuba's constitutional and legislative framework guaranteed the enjoyment of all human rights and fundamental freedoms.¹⁷ Joint Submission 6 (JS6) and other 29 submissions noted that, in line with the updating of its economic and social model, Cuba had improved its legal and institutional framework to preserve and strengthen social justice and solidarity.¹⁸

8. The Observatorio Cubano de Derechos Humanos (Cuban Human Rights Observatory) (OCDH) stated that the Government had not undertaken any reforms to promote the exercise of political freedoms, such as the adoption of a new electoral law, a new associations law or a law to regulate journalism.¹⁹ Cubalex noted that Cuba had failed to honour its commitment to promote the effective participation of civil society in the adoption of human rights legislation.²⁰ Joint Submission 21 (JS21) recommended amending the Constitution to expressly acknowledge the supra-constitutional status of international human rights instruments.²¹

9. The Coordinadora Latinoamericana en Bélgica (Latin American Coordinating Office in Belgium) (COLABE) reported that Cuba had an effective inter-institutional system for the protection of citizens' rights, which involved civil society participation.²² The National Union of Jurists of Cuba (UNJC) and 16 other submissions noted that the complaints and petitions system of the Attorney General's Office had improved and was effective.²³

10. Joint Submission 20 (JS20) and JS21 asserted that the mechanisms in place for restoring rights that had been violated were ineffective.²⁴ Six reports recommended that Cuba establish an independent national human rights institution in accordance with the Paris Principles.²⁵

11. China Society for Human Rights Studies (CSHRS) and other 6 submissions noted Cuba's efforts to implement many of the UPR recommendations.²⁶ Joint Submission 19 (JS19) recommended that Cuba incorporate the results of this UPR into human rights action plans and present a midterm report on the implementation of UPR recommendations.²⁷ JS10 recommended setting up an inter-institutional mechanism for regular consultations to promote the participation of civil society, including unregistered organizations, in the follow-up to UPR recommendations.²⁸

C. Implementation of international human rights obligations, taking into account applicable international humanitarian law

1. Cross-cutting issues

Equality and non-discrimination²⁹

12. UNJC noted that discrimination, including on grounds of race, skin colour, sex, national origin or religious belief, was prohibited under the Constitution and punishable under the Criminal Code by penalties that included deprivation of liberty.³⁰ At least 34

submissions underscored Cuba's progresses towards the elimination of discrimination based on different grounds.³¹

13. Youth Support Initiative (YSI) noted that Cuba had not completely overcome some racial prejudices and stereotypes that survived from the colonial past.³² The Comité Ciudadano por la Integración Racial (Citizens' Committee for Racial Integration) (CIR) noted the structural marginalization of Afro-Cubans and regretted the lack of adequate statistical data.³³ It recommended adopting public policies that would help to remedy racial inequalities.³⁴ The Cofradía de la Negritud (Negritude Brotherhood) (CONEG) recommended, inter alia, establishing a State body to combat racism.³⁵

14. JS5 observed that progress had been made in the recognition of sexual diversity in laws and public policies. However, it noted that discriminatory practices persisted in institutions and in society and recommended that sexual orientation and gender identity be included as grounds of non-discrimination in article 42 of the Constitution.³⁶

*Development, the environment, and business and human rights*³⁷

15. Numerous submissions commended Cuba for the measures taken to protect the environment, promote the use of renewable and non-polluting energy, respond to natural disasters and fight against climate change.³⁸

16. Around 95 submissions praised Cuba's international solidarity and cooperation programmes in the fields of education, health, culture and sport, including the deployment of medical missions such as the Operation "Miracle"; the implementation in many countries of the adult literacy programme "Yo sí Puedo"; and the assistance provided to other countries that had suffered natural disasters and epidemics.³⁹

17. The Comité Permanente por la Defensa de los Derechos Humanos (Standing Committee for the Defence of Human Rights) (CPDH) and six other submissions highlighted the role played by Cuba in the peace negotiations between the Government of Colombia and the Fuerzas Armadas Revolucionarias de Colombia (Revolutionary Armed Forces of Colombia).⁴⁰

18. JS2 reported on the negative impact on the enjoyment of human rights of the economic, commercial and financial embargo that has been imposed on the people of Cuba for over 50 years.⁴¹ At least other 72 submissions expressed similar concerns and indicated that the embargo was the main obstacle to the economic and social development of Cuba.⁴² Several submissions also noted that the small steps taken since the last UPR to ease the embargo had been rolled back.⁴³

19. Four submissions indicated that since 2011 Cuba had embarked on an extensive process to update its economic model, which aimed at preserving socialism while introducing new forms of market-based mechanisms.⁴⁴

2. Civil and political rights

*Right to life, liberty and security of person*⁴⁵

20. Around 21 reports noted that the death penalty had not been applied in Cuba since 2003, that it had never been applied to women and that its application was prohibited for persons under 20 years of age.⁴⁶ Five reports recommended abolishing it.⁴⁷

21. Several submissions stated that there were no cases of extrajudicial killings, torture or disappearances in Cuba.⁴⁸ CNDH-RD noted that the climate of public safety in Cuba facilitated the enjoyment of many rights.⁴⁹

22. Joint Submission 9 (JS9) reported a number of alleged cases of extrajudicial killings, death of political opponents, and enforced disappearances since the 2013 UPR and recommended that Cuba investigate all such cases allowing the participation of international experts and observers.⁵⁰

23. In 2016, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) noted that there had been an increase in the number of alleged cases of summary arbitrary detention, coupled with the use of sometimes excessive and disproportionate force by State security officers.⁵¹ Several other submissions expressed similar concerns.⁵² Joint Submission 7 (JS7) reported that there had been 36,254 cases of such detention between 2013 and 2017 and that the authorities did not show arrest warrants for political opponents, who were held in incommunicado detention for 24 or 72 hours.⁵³

24. In 2015, IACHR noted that the pardon granted to 3,522 persons sentenced to imprisonment had excluded, in principle, persons convicted of offences against State security and that such offences were defined in broad and vague terms.⁵⁴ Center for a Free Cuba (CFFC) noted the existence of over one hundred political prisoners in Cuba and recommended their release.⁵⁵

25. Joint Submission 12 (JS12) pointed out that, in the 2013 universal periodic review of Cuba, the State had rejected the recommendations to repeal legislation relating to “pre-criminal social dangerousness”.⁵⁶⁻⁵⁷ It stated that this concept was used to harass, threaten and prosecute human rights defenders, who were branded as subversives or terrorists, and was also applied to women and men who worked as prostitutes, members of the lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and intersex community and young persons who were not studying or employed.⁵⁸

26. At least 28 submissions reported that Cuba had developed a penitentiary system in compliance with international standards and underscored its non-discriminatory, preventive, re-educational and social reintegration approach as well as the provision of adequate food, health, education and vocational training.⁵⁹

27. JS9 noted the very poor overall conditions of prisons, including inadequate nutrition and hygiene, abuse from authorities, and denial of medical care, leading in some cases to death and suicide of prisoners.⁶⁰ The Unión Patriótica de Cuba (Patriotic Union of Cuba) (UNPACU) reported that, in prisons, activists were subjected to beatings, physical and psychological torture and other cruel, inhuman and degrading treatment.⁶¹ AI recommended that Cuba ensure full compliance with the Standard Minimum Rules for Treatment of Prisoners and allow independent human rights monitors access to prisons and detention centres.⁶²

28. The Liga Argentina por los Derechos del Hombre (Argentine League for Human Rights) (LADH) noted that all persons deprived of their liberty could submit complaints and appeal against any disciplinary measure imposed upon them.⁶³ Joint Submission 13 (JS13) expressed concern about the risk of reprisals faced by detainees and their relatives if they filed complaints and recommended aligning the Prison System Rules with international standards and adopting national legislation to prohibit all cruel, inhuman or degrading punishment of persons deprived of their liberty.⁶⁴

29. JS5 noted that police officers were among the most frequent perpetrators of acts of violence against members of the lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender community and recommended, inter alia, establishing protocols for the police on the treatment of such persons and setting up a special body within the police to deal with cases of that kind.⁶⁵

*Administration of justice, including impunity, and the rule of law*⁶⁶

30. Joint Submission 1 (JS1) asserted that, in Cuba, courts were operationally independent by virtue of their structure and members of the judiciary acted with complete independence.⁶⁷

31. Civil Rights Defenders (CRD) noted that, under the Constitution, the courts were subordinate to the National Assembly and the Council of State and that this constituted an infringement of the separation of powers and of the principle of the independence and impartiality of the courts.⁶⁸ AI further noted that in Cuba all defence lawyers must belong to the National Organization of Collective Law Offices and that application by organisations of independent lawyers to legally register were consistently denied.⁶⁹ Consejería Jurídica e Instrucción Cívica (Legal Consultancy and Civic Education) (CJIC) noted that Cuba did not have a constitutional court responsible for ensuring the legality and enforcement of legislation.⁷⁰

32. JS2 noted that all citizens were equal before the law and that the presumption of innocence, the right of defence and the right to a fair trial were guaranteed in Cuba.⁷¹

Around 18 submissions noted that Cuba had taken measures to ensure a higher performance in the delivery of justice, focusing on preserving procedural guarantees and a more effective interaction between the defendant and his/her lawyer.⁷²

33. AI stated that the judiciary continued to lack independence and impartiality and allowed criminal proceedings to be brought against those who were critical of the government.⁷³ JS20 recommended ensuring access to a fair trial for all detainees.⁷⁴ JS21 recommended promulgating an amnesty law for persons serving sentences for reasons relating to dissent and opposition.⁷⁵

34. JS14 stated that there was still no mechanism to immediately challenge the legality of an arrest and that accused persons did not have access to defence counsel at the investigation stage.⁷⁶

35. JS1 noted that Cuba had been considered one of the least corrupt countries in Latin America in 2013 and 2015.⁷⁷

*Fundamental freedoms and the right to participate in public and political life*⁷⁸

36. JS1 and other 22 reports noted that the Constitution recognised the right to freedom of expression and of the press and that in Cuba there were different sources of information expressing different opinions.⁷⁹

37. The Asociación Por la Libertad de Prensa (Press Freedom Association) (APLP) noted that, under the Constitution, freedom of opinion and of the press must be consistent with the objectives of a socialist society and exercised through media that were socially owned or belonged to the State.⁸⁰ JS19 indicated that Cuba did not have any media law and that the Cuban Institute of Radio and Television, which governed the media sector, operated under the supervision of the Ideological Department of the Communist Party.⁸¹

38. Around 20 submissions noted that Cuba was expanding the social use of information and communication technologies, including the internet.⁸² JS2 acknowledged the State's efforts in this area, while noting that access points and technologies remained inadequate and were not affordable for all.⁸³

39. AI noted that the government prioritised access to the highly censored, government-curated national intranet and that alternative online news sources operated within a legal limbo that exposed journalists and media workers to the risk of harassment and arbitrary detention.⁸⁴ APLP reported that 255 cases of violence and ill-treatment against independent journalists had been recorded over the past two years.⁸⁵ Agora Cuba Inc (ACINC) recommended, inter alia, that Cuba stop monitoring private communications, blocking websites and censoring messages based on their content.⁸⁶

40. JS19 underscored that Cuba had no laws guaranteeing access to public information and that Decree-Law No. 199 of 1999 established a System for the Security and Protection of Official Information that placed strong restrictions on the possibility to access public information.⁸⁷

41. Many submissions asserted that, in Cuba, there was no repression on the basis of political opinion and that human rights activists were protected.⁸⁸ Around 14 submissions stressed that there were severe punitive measures for all persons and public officials who tried to unlawfully violate the freedoms of thought, association, peaceful assembly, demonstration, complaint and petition.⁸⁹ Several submissions considered that there were persons financed from abroad to cause subversion or discredit the system.⁹⁰

42. Around 21 submissions noted that repression of dissent persisted in Cuba and referred to numerous acts of violence, intimidation and harassment committed by the authorities against human rights defenders, journalists, civil society and political activists and their families. These included alleged cases of excessive use of force, ill treatment and arbitrary detentions; trumped-up charges for common crimes; charges of "pre-criminal dangerousness"; acts of "repudiation"; unwarranted travel restrictions; search warrants; confiscation of documents, computers and personal property; and defamation campaigns.⁹¹ JS19 observed that numerous activists had been subjected to reprisals for interacting with the UN and Inter-American human rights systems.⁹²

43. JS21 noted that the Government of Cuba continued to make false, defamatory statements about human rights defenders and pro-democracy groups.⁹³

44. At least 36 submissions stressed the active role of Cuban civil society in the control of the organs of power and in the decision-making process on public matters.⁹⁴ Approximately 42 submissions noted the extensive citizens' participation in the process of updating Cuba's economic and social model.⁹⁵

45. Around 33 submissions stated that Cuba recognized and encouraged mass and social organizations representing the interests of different sectors of the population and involved them in the building of the Cuban society.⁹⁶ JS20 and JS21 asserted that mass organizations were created and monitored by the State and exercised control over all social activity.⁹⁷

46. Six submissions stated that the Associations Act established requirements that prevented the registration of civil society organizations that were independent of the State, including trade unions and political parties.⁹⁸ CJIC noted that it was considered an offence for such organizations not to be listed in the register of associations and that members of unregistered associations and their relatives were therefore prosecuted.⁹⁹ Six submissions recommended that Cuba should align its legislation with international standards by enabling the legal establishment of associations that were independent of the State.¹⁰⁰

47. At least 44 submissions stressed that in Cuba elections were free, universal and transparent, and that were held on a regular basis with high and voluntary popular participation.¹⁰¹ Twenty-seven submissions stated that in Cuba all citizens, irrespective of their economic or financial capacity, had equal access to public positions and that candidates were assessed by their merits.¹⁰² Some 26 submissions noted that there were no party candidates.¹⁰³

48. Three submissions stated that, in practice, the electoral system prevented political opponents from gaining access to public office; this was due to, among other things, the lack of independence of the electoral commissions, the nomination commissions and the assemblies for the nomination of candidates for municipal assemblies.¹⁰⁴ The Centro para la Apertura y el Desarrollo de América Latina (Centre for the Opening and Development of Latin America) (CADAL) reported that there had been complaints of intimidation, coercion and smear campaigns aimed at preventing members of opposition groups and civil society from being elected to the municipal assemblies.¹⁰⁵ JS20 recommended repealing the current electoral law and establishing a pluralist and inclusive electoral system.¹⁰⁶

49. At least 46 submissions emphasized that, in Cuba, freedom of religion was guaranteed without discrimination.¹⁰⁷ Around 16 submissions noted that the right of parents to raise their children in accordance with their own moral and religious beliefs was recognized in Cuba.¹⁰⁸

50. CSW stressed that, despite several recommendations during the last two UPR, Cuba continued to undermine freedom of religion or belief.¹⁰⁹ Five submissions referred to different types of violations, including obstacles to registration of religious groups, intrusive governmental practices, demolition or expropriation of church property and harassment, persecution and arrest of religious leaders.¹¹⁰

Prohibition of all forms of slavery

51. JS2 noted that the 2017–2020 national action plan for preventing and combating human trafficking and protecting victims was being implemented.¹¹¹ CNDH-RD noted that progress had been made in combating and preventing human trafficking and warned that, as Cuba gradually opened up to tourism, it would face challenges such as child sexual abuse and labour exploitation of foreign workers in the construction of tourist infrastructure.¹¹²

52. The Asociación Cubana para el Desarrollo de la Educación Infantil (Cuban Association for the Development of Preschool Education) (ACDEI) noted that the issue of trafficking in persons, especially women and children, was not exhaustively addressed in Cuban legislation.¹¹³

Right to privacy and family life

53. JS5 recommended recognizing unions between persons of the same sex.¹¹⁴

3. Economic, social and cultural rights*Right to work and to just and favourable conditions of work*¹¹⁵

54. Four submissions indicated that Cuba guaranteed the right to work and to just working conditions.¹¹⁶ The National Coalition of Concerned Legal Professionals (NCCLP) stated that in 2013 Cuba adopted, through a widely participatory process, major statutory reforms to its labour laws.¹¹⁷

55. The National Association of Cuban Economists and Accountants (ANEC) noted that Cuba had achieved its goal of full employment, with an unemployment rate of 3.3 per cent in 2016.¹¹⁸ The Federation of Cuban Women (FMC) stated that women accounted for 48 per cent of the workforce and enjoyed the right to equal pay for work of equal value.¹¹⁹ JS21 noted that pay was inadequate and did not cover workers' basic needs.¹²⁰

56. Australia-Cuba Friendship Society WA Branch (ACFS-WA) noted that Cuba had implemented reforms to increase self-employment opportunities.¹²¹ On the other hand, OCDH reported that, over the past two years, there had been an increase in disincentive measures aimed at the private sector, especially in the areas of food, housing and public transport.¹²²

57. Around 20 submissions noted that in Cuba practically all workers were unionized and protected by collective agreements.¹²³ The Cuban Trade Union Federation (CTC) stated that trade unions were consulted on labour and social policies, could participate directly in the administration of justice in the field of employment and had the right to conduct inspections.¹²⁴

58. CRD noted that, in practice, no trade unions other than CTC were legally recognized.¹²⁵ JS7 emphasized that independent trade union activists were systematically repressed.¹²⁶

59. The Asociación Vasca De Amistad y Cooperación Con Cuba (Basque Association for Friendship and Cooperation with Cuba) (Euskadi-Cuba) noted that child labour was not a significant problem in Cuba.¹²⁷ Corriente de la Cultura Jurídica para la Sociedad Civil Cubana (Movement for the Legal Education of Cuban Civil Society) (CJS) noted that the fight against child labour was hindered by legislative and institutional weaknesses and that child labour was widespread in the non-State sector.¹²⁸

60. The Asociación Cubana de Limitados Físico-Motores (Cuban Association of Persons with Motor and Physical Disabilities) (ACLIFIM) noted that efforts to develop labour policies for persons with disabilities had been stepped up and that, thanks to those efforts, there were now 150 special workshops, which provided work for 2,383 persons with disabilities.¹²⁹ The Asociación Nacional del Ciego (National Association of Blind Persons) (ANCI) noted that the Labour Code prohibited discrimination against persons with disabilities in the field of employment.¹³⁰

*Right to social security*¹³¹

61. Several submissions commended Cuba on the quality and universality of its social security system.¹³² ANEC noted that the system included sickness and accident benefits, maternity allowances and old-age pensions. The social welfare system also provided protection for persons who were not fit for work or who required State support on account of their living conditions or state of health.¹³³ The Guayasamín Foundation noted the high level of investment in the social security system in Cuba.¹³⁴

62. JS7 stated that the social welfare system was not universal as the Government had reduced the number of beneficiaries, leaving large vulnerable sectors of the population without any protection.¹³⁵

*Right to an adequate standard of living*¹³⁶

63. At least 23 submissions noted that all people in Cuba had equal access to basic quality services such as education, health care, social security and welfare without discrimination.¹³⁷ CNDH-RD underscored the high level of human development achieved by Cuba.¹³⁸

64. JS2 noted that Cuba guaranteed the full enjoyment of economic, social and cultural rights through a planned economic development model which combined social and economic aspects.¹³⁹ It drew attention to various challenges, such as the dual currency system, market segmentation, the need to increase the supply of quality products and services, high prices and the purchasing power of wages, which remained inadequate.¹⁴⁰ Colectivo Patria y Cultura (Culture and Homeland Collective) noted that openness to the development of a private economy had increased in recent years.¹⁴¹

65. OCDH recommended that the Government undertake real economic reform, with due respect for the economic rights of Cubans, especially the right to private property, the right to engage in free enterprise and the right to legal certainty.¹⁴²

66. Joint Submission 3 (JS3) acknowledged that the Government prioritized the right to food and pointed out that the embargo was the main obstacle to the full enjoyment of that right.¹⁴³ It noted that, despite the Government's policies, food production remained inadequate and did not meet the basic needs of the population.¹⁴⁴

67. ANEC noted the State's efforts to reduce the housing deficit and observed that housing was an area of social development that had been neglected owing to a lack of resources.¹⁴⁵

68. Camaquito emphasized that access to drinking water and to the water and sewage system was a priority for the State.¹⁴⁶

*Right to health*¹⁴⁷

69. Around 33 submissions noted that Cuba regarded health as a fundamental human right and guaranteed universal and free access to high-quality health care.¹⁴⁸ CPDH noted that Cuba invested more in health, as a percentage of the national budget, than any other country in Latin America and the Caribbean.¹⁴⁹

70. Eight reports highlighted Cuba's advanced and effective model of preventive health care.¹⁵⁰ Various organizations stressed the high doctor-to-population ratio in the country.¹⁵¹

71. At least 19 reports noted the high life expectancy, both for men and women.¹⁵² The Association of Health Professionals Trained in Cuba (AELAM) noted that Cuba had continued to improve its provision of care for older persons, in view of the increase in life expectancy.¹⁵³

72. Several submissions noted that Cuba was free from undernutrition, including child undernutrition.¹⁵⁴

73. The Centro Oscar Arnulfo Romero (Oscar Arnulfo Romero Centre) (COAR) stated that the right to sexual and reproductive health was guaranteed in Cuba. It expressed concern, however, about the rise in teenage pregnancy.¹⁵⁵ Friends of Cuba in Zambia (FRICUZ) noted that the right to abortion was fully guaranteed.¹⁵⁶

74. ANEC emphasized that Cuba attached great importance to the Mother and Child Programme.¹⁵⁷ Numerous reports noted that Cuba had achieved a very low rate of maternal¹⁵⁸ and infant mortality.¹⁵⁹

75. CUT noted that Cuba had improved its national programme on sexually transmitted infections and HIV/AIDS and drew attention to its achievements in that area.¹⁶⁰ Around 21 submissions underscored that in 2015 Cuba became the first country in the world certified by the World Health Organisation as having eliminated mother-to-child transmission of HIV and syphilis.¹⁶¹

76. ANCI and the Asociación Nacional de Sordos de Cuba (National Association of Deaf Persons) (ANSOC) noted that Cuba provided specialized medical care for persons with visual or hearing impairments.¹⁶²

*Right to education*¹⁶³

77. Around 31 submissions praised Cuba for ensuring free and universal access to education of high quality at all levels, including university education.¹⁶⁴ Sixteen submissions highlighted the high percentage of GDP that Cuba invested in the education system.¹⁶⁵

78. A number of submissions noted that Cuba was an illiteracy free country and that school enrolment stood at more than 99%.¹⁶⁶ The All-China Women's Federation (ACWF) noted that women had equal access to education and made up 65.2% of higher education graduates.¹⁶⁷ The José Martí Cultural Association (AJMS) noted that since 2014 Cuban universities had introduced different kinds of flexible study programmes to facilitate access for workers, elderly and rural population.¹⁶⁸

79. Cuba Solidarity Campaign (CSC) stated that teaching was a high-status occupation in Cuba, that teachers were highly qualified, and that the majority of head teachers and school leaders were women.¹⁶⁹ All-China Youth Federation (ACYF) noted the high teacher-student ratio.¹⁷⁰ On the other hand, ACDEI noted that there was a shortage of teachers in several provinces.¹⁷¹

80. The Movimiento Cubano Reflexión (Cuban Movement for Debate) (MCR) noted that parents had lost the right to teach their children about the civic matters and political beliefs that they considered important, because the education system was entirely State-run.¹⁷² Directorio Democrático Cubano (DDC) and CFFC stressed that the Cuban government denied access to education to students who held political and religious views that differed from those of the State.¹⁷³

81. ANCI and ANSOC drew attention to the measures taken by Cuba to ensure the inclusive nature of education.¹⁷⁴ JS6 noted that, through the provision of special education, Cuba protected the right to education of persons with different abilities who could not be fully integrated into mainstream education.¹⁷⁵

82. JS5 recommended incorporating the principle of non-discrimination on grounds of sexual orientation and gender identity in school curricula and activities.¹⁷⁶

83. JS1 recommended continuing to improve, update and expand the scope of human rights training for civil servants and the general public.¹⁷⁷ ACDEI noted that material on human rights was confiscated and classed as counter-revolutionary by the authorities.¹⁷⁸ CONEG recommended that human rights education cover the topic of discrimination.¹⁷⁹

84. JS2 stated that the Government recognized culture as an essential source of development.¹⁸⁰

4. Rights of specific persons or groups

*Women*¹⁸¹

85. A number of submissions highlighted the achievements of Cuba in ensuring gender equality, including the legal, institutional and policy framework created for this purpose.¹⁸² The Fundación Género con Clase (Gender with Class Foundation) (GCC) noted that progress had been made towards the empowerment of women in Cuba, despite the persistence of some prejudices that were rooted in a patriarchal culture.¹⁸³

86. At least 18 submissions highlighted the high level of participation of women in the political, economic and social and cultural life, including in the judiciary and the legal profession, the health and education sectors.¹⁸⁴ JS3 and 24 other submissions noted that women held a significant number of seats in the Cuban parliament.¹⁸⁵

87. ACWF encouraged Cuba to further improve the legal framework to promote gender equality in conformity with its national conditions.¹⁸⁶ JS3 mentioned that it was still necessary to reverse inequalities in areas such as women's participation in the labour force, including in decision-making positions; the division of housework; and childcare.¹⁸⁷ CIR recommended protecting Afro-Cuban women in marginalized and highly vulnerable situations.¹⁸⁸

88. JS14 recommended amending the Criminal Code to establish femicide as an offence and to provide for the use of restraining orders to protect victims of gender-based violence; setting up shelters; and abolishing rehabilitation centres and detention centres for victims of prostitution.¹⁸⁹

*Children*¹⁹⁰

89. JS8 noted that there was a framework of laws and policies for children and young persons that functioned as a comprehensive intersectoral system.¹⁹¹ Three submissions emphasized that children in Cuba were fully protected.¹⁹²

90. ACDEI noted that Cuba did not have a comprehensive child protection law, a children's advocate or an independent institution responsible for developing and coordinating public initiatives for the benefit of children and adolescents.¹⁹³ It recommended bringing national legislation and the criminal justice system into line with the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Optional Protocols thereto.¹⁹⁴

91. The Global Initiative to End All Corporal Punishment of Children (GIEACPC) recommended that Cuba enact legislation clearly prohibiting all corporal punishment of children in every setting and urged to adopt the draft Family Code.¹⁹⁵

92. ACYF recommended to further improve the legal framework to protect and promote the human rights of youth and to consider adopting a Youth Law or a long-term Youth Development Program.¹⁹⁶

*Persons with disabilities*¹⁹⁷

93. ACLIFIM stated that persons with disabilities were rights holders in Cuba and that development programmes, regulations and laws covered the basic principles that were enshrined in the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities.¹⁹⁸

94. JS2 and ANSOC noted that organizations of persons with disabilities were involved in the development of disability policies.¹⁹⁹ ANCI noted that the National Council to Support Persons with Disabilities had been set up to design a national action plan for persons with disabilities and to evaluate its implementation.²⁰⁰

95. Three submissions drew attention to numerous measures that had been taken to promote the social integration of persons with visual or hearing impairments.²⁰¹ ACLIFIM noted steps that had been taken to improve accessibility for persons with disabilities, including accessibility of public transport.²⁰² On the other hand, CJS stated that new regulations specifically designed to facilitate access to the labour market for persons with disabilities had not been implemented.²⁰³

*Migrants, refugees, asylum seekers and internally displaced persons*²⁰⁴

96. Dansk-Cubansk Forening (DCF) stressed that the new migration measures had benefitted Cuban immigrants and residents abroad, and that the right to and the possibility for Cubans to travel abroad (and to return) had markedly expanded.²⁰⁵

97. In 2016, IACHR noted that the general nature of certain terms in the Migration Act conferred a broad discretion on the authorities to allow or not the exit of Cuban nationals.²⁰⁶
