Introduction

1. The Working Group on the Universal Periodic Review, established in accordance with Human Rights Council resolution 5/1, held its twenty-third session from 2 to 13 November 2015. The review of Georgia was held at the 13th meeting, on 10 November 2015. The delegation of Georgia was headed by the Deputy Minister of Foreign Affairs, Khatuna Totladze. At its 17th meeting, held on 12 November 2015, the Working Group adopted the report on Georgia.

2. On 13 January 2015, the Human Rights Council selected the following group of rapporteurs (troika) to facilitate the review of Georgia: Algeria, Portugal and the former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia.

3. In accordance with paragraph 15 of the annex to Human Rights Council resolution 5/1 and paragraph 5 of the annex to Council resolution 16/21, the following documents were issued for the review of Georgia:

(a) A national report submitted/written presentation made in accordance with paragraph 15 (a) (A/HRC/WG.6/23/GEO/1);

(b) A compilation prepared by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) in accordance with paragraph 15 (b) (A/HRC/WG.6/23/GEO/2 and Corr.1);

(c) A summary prepared by OHCHR in accordance with paragraph 15 (c) (A/HRC/WG.6/23/GEO/3).

4. A list of questions prepared in advance by Belgium, the Czech Republic, Germany, Mexico, the Netherlands, Norway, Slovenia, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland was transmitted to Georgia through the troika. These questions are available on the extranet of the Working Group.

I. Summary of the proceedings of the review process

A. Presentation by the State under review

5. The delegation of Georgia noted that the review was taking place just after Georgia's election as a member of the Human Rights Council. Georgia was honoured to become a member; its membership underlined the country's commitment to further advancing its national and foreign policies for the protection of human rights.

6. Georgia was keen to discuss the human rights situation in the country and saw the universal periodic review as a unique instrument for the promotion and protection of human rights. During the first review cycle, Georgia had undertaken to implement 136 recommendations, and had successfully implemented 98 of these; the implementation of the remaining 38 was ongoing. In 2013, Georgia had submitted a midterm report on the implementation of the recommendations.

7. Georgia's second national report had been prepared by an inter-agency group which brought together high- and mid-level officials from the executive, judicial and legislative branches. That group had been established in 2014 for the implementation of reporting obligations before the United Nations treaty- and Charter-based bodies. It had also engaged widely with the non-governmental sector; numerous consultative and dissemination activities had been carried out as part of an ongoing process.

8. Georgia had had continued fruitful cooperation with the special procedure mandate holders. Its commitment was underlined through its standing invitation. Several visits had occurred during the second review cycle, and more were planned for 2016.

9. Georgia enumerated its major achievements since the first review period, starting with the successful completion of a cycle of democratic and competitive elections which had created a precedent for the peaceful transfer of power in 2012. The 2012 parliamentary, 2013 presidential and 2014 local elections had all been assessed by international observers as having been free and fair. Various constitutional amendments had entered into force following the transfer of power. They had introduced new regulation of the balance of power and mechanisms for greater accountability at all levels of Government.

10. In 2014, following the transparent involvement of civil society and international actors, Georgia had adopted its first comprehensive long-term human rights strategy, for the period 2014-2020, and a subsequent action plan for the period 2014-2015. That strategy had been elaborated on the basis of the recommendations of the national human rights institution, OHCHR, national and international human rights non-governmental organizations and the report of the European Union Special Adviser on Constitutional and Legal Reform and Human Rights in Georgia. The strategy strengthened the rights-based approach that would drive State policy and programmes and identify the relevant rights holders and duty bearers. The Human Rights Inter-agency Council under the Prime Minister, which included civil society and international organizations with the right to vote, was responsible for the effective implementation and monitoring of the strategy. The Council was accountable before Parliament through the submission of an annual report.

11. The comprehensive anti-discrimination law, adopted in 2014, was an important development, as the first legislative mechanism in Georgia that explicitly prohibited all forms of discrimination, including on the basis of gender identity, in both the public and private sectors. The Public Defender was tasked with monitoring its implementation.

12. In order to strengthen systems for the protection of human rights, both the President and the Prime Minister had appointed advisers on human rights issues. Within the Foreign Ministry, an ambassador-at-large was responsible for the human rights portfolio.

13. Georgia stated that its judiciary had benefited from wide-ranging reform. For example, in 2013 the High Council of Justice – the country's key judicial institution – had become more democratic, open and transparent. Civil society representatives and academics had replaced members of Parliament sitting in the Council, and television cameras had now been allowed into courtrooms. In 2014, life tenure for judges had been introduced, together with new transparent and objective criteria and procedures for the appointment and appraisal of judges by the Council. Further reforms were under way.

14. Turning to reforms in the law enforcement sector, Georgia stated that the Government had divided police and intelligence functions, with the police acting as a community-oriented agency to prevent and combat crime. Reforms had also been implemented in the migration services and with regard to the protection of personal data by the police. Human rights was now an essential subject in the police academy, considerable work had been done to address domestic violence, the recruitment of women had been increased and anti-discrimination guidelines for police officers had been introduced.

15. Georgia outlined reforms undertaken to depoliticize and strengthen the prosecution. The prosecutorial powers of the Minister of Justice had passed to the Chief Prosecutor, while a gender-balanced Prosecutorial Council, which included prosecutors, representatives of the legislative and judicial branches and civil society, had recently been established and would nominate candidates for the position of Chief Prosecutor for final selection by Parliament.

16. Georgia considered that torture and ill-treatment had been eliminated as a systemic problem and noted that the Special Rapporteur on torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment had acknowledged the success of the reforms undertaken since 2012.

17. In relation to the penitentiaries, Georgia reported that the number of inmates had been more than halved in 2013 as a result of a large-scale amnesty. The decreased number of inmates had been maintained without a significant impact on public safety. Minimum space for inmates had been guaranteed; internal monitoring of detention mechanisms had been strengthened and external monitoring had been carried out by the Public Defender and the national preventive mechanism. Prisoners enjoyed health services equivalent to those provided to the general public.

18. Reforms since 2012 had built a data protection system, which included a data protection supervisory authority with a head elected by Parliament and a mandate covering the private and public sectors, including law enforcement agencies.

19. Georgia's numerous reforms to improve the media environment and facilitate pluralism included the adoption of legislation on the Board of the Public Broadcaster and measures for the improved financial transparency of television companies, the digital switchover and the obligation to include on cable and satellite services all television stations that broadcast news.

20. Georgia noted that the Public Defender had recognized the positive developments that had occurred following the amendments to the legislation covering assemblies and demonstrations.

21. In the light of Georgia's religious diversity, the Government had decided, in line with best European practice, to set up the State Agency for Religious Issues, which made recommendations based upon research and dialogue between religious associations in Georgia.

22. With respect to finding long-term solutions for internally displaced persons and the protection of their rights during displacement, the delegation outlined the new policies of Georgia, with improved criteria for beneficiary selection and housing allocation procedures. The budget allocation for durable solutions had increased dramatically, and 15,000 families had already been given accommodation. Still, the ultimate goal was a safe, dignified and unconditional return of internally displaced persons who were victims of ethnic cleansing to their places of origin.

23. Protecting women's rights was stated to be one of Georgia's top priorities. Recent developments included several legislative changes and improved maternity leave. National action plans on gender equality, the implementation of Security Council resolution 1325 (2000) and the elimination of domestic violence had also been adopted.

24. In 2015, Parliament had adopted a juvenile justice code aimed at fully incorporating into law the relevant principles enshrined in the Convention on the Rights of the Child and other relevant international standards. Furthermore, Georgia had committed itself, within the National Strategy on Human Rights for 2014-2020, to further improving the educational system, developing health-care and social services, reducing poverty and child mortality and ensuring the effective protection of children from violence. Financial assistance for children with disabilities and social-care programmes had also been significantly increased.

25. Georgia had ratified the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities in 2014. The coordination of its implementation was led by the Prime Minister, and an action plan had been adopted to ensure equal opportunities for persons with disabilities.

26. Georgia reported that it had made significant progress in the protection of labour rights, including through amendments to the Labour Code in 2013 based upon International Labour Organization standards. A mediation service had been created in order to prevent and resolve labour disputes, along with a State programme for the monitoring of labour conditions. The Government would continue to strengthen the labour inspectorate mechanism.

27. Georgia stated that its civic integration policy was aimed at protecting the rights of national minorities, ensuring civic integration and supporting the further development of a tolerant environment. The civic equality and integration strategy, and the respective action plan, for 2015-2020 would further contribute to ensuring equality, the participation of ethnic minorities in all spheres of public life and the preservation of their cultures and identities.

28. Georgia highlighted the launch in 2013 of the “Georgia 2020” socioeconomic development strategy, aimed at guaranteeing the right to health and a universal health-care programme, as well as the launch of a programme to eliminate hepatitis C, providing the population with a pre-diagnostic examination, the latest medicines and monitoring.

29. The delegation stated that Georgia had consistently pursued policies aimed at ensuring the full enjoyment of rights for the entire population, but the foreign military occupation of Georgia’s regions of Abkhazia and Tskhinvali/South Ossetia gravely affected the human rights situation in those regions. It noted that human rights violations occurred frequently in the occupied territories, including but not limited to subjecting people to arbitrary detention, systematic violation of property rights, restrictions on the freedom of movement and denial of the right to education in one’s native language. It was concerned that, in 2011, the occupying forces had intensified the process of installing barbed wire fences and other obstacles along the occupation line in both regions. Georgia was particularly alarmed that no international monitoring mechanisms were allowed access and quoted the assessment by the former Human Rights Commissioner Navi Pillay of the Tskhinvali region as “a black hole” and “one of the most inaccessible places on earth, with no access permitted for international agencies”. It stated that the dire situation clearly demonstrated the urgent need for the active involvement of OHCHR and the special procedure mandate holders.

B. Interactive dialogue and responses by the State under review

30. Croatia commended Georgia for its achievements in addressing torture and ill-treatment in the prison system. It welcomed the adoption of the anti-discrimination law and the proclamation of 2014 as the year of women’s rights.

31. The Czech Republic acknowledged the genuine efforts that had been made by Georgia to improve respect for human rights and the rule of law since the previous review cycle.

32. Denmark commended Georgia for the progress achieved on the four recommendations it had put forward during the first review. It was concerned by the extensive use of pretrial detention and the occurrence of lengthy detentions that were disproportionate to the crimes alleged.

33. Djibouti welcomed the progress made in the implementation of recommendations accepted during the previous review cycle, including the adoption of the Law on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination.

34. Egypt noted the role played by the national inter-agency coordination mechanism. It regretted that the criminal code did not prohibit racist discourse, the dissemination of ideas based on racial superiority or expressions of racial hatred.
35. Estonia supported the territorial integrity of Georgia and stood for free access by Georgian and international institutions to observe the human rights situation in the occupied territories. It commended Georgia for cooperating with the International Criminal Court.
36. France welcomed the ratification of the Convention on the Rights of Persons With Disabilities and the Council of Europe Convention on Preventing and Combating Violence against Women and Domestic Violence (Istanbul Convention). France asked whether Georgia planned to strengthen the Public Defender's Office and allocate additional resources to implement the anti-discrimination law.
37. Germany welcomed the improvement of the situation regarding freedom of the press and independent journalism. However, a recent court case adjudicating the ownership and management of a television channel gave reason for concern.
38. Ghana commended the ratification of the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities and called on Georgia to consider also ratifying its Optional Protocol. Ghana was concerned at reported attempts by the Government to influence some media outlets.
39. Greece highlighted progress in the promotion of gender equality, recent reforms in the field of the protection of persons with disabilities and progress in the fight against trafficking in persons, which remained an important challenge.
40. Honduras welcomed the adoption of the law against discrimination and the measures taken in 2014 and 2015 to protect internally displaced persons and ensure their welfare.
41. Hungary noted that the implementation of the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities was still lacking. It saw room for further improvement with regard to investigating reports of torture or ill-treatment and prosecuting cases that involved such treatment. Hungary regretted that corporal punishment of children was still lawful in Georgia.
42. Iceland welcomed the introduction of the national plan of action for gender equality and urged Georgia to ensure that sanctions were sufficient to discourage and prevent discrimination, and to take further steps in that regard.
43. Indonesia stated that the rights of migrant workers should be one of the priorities of the international community. It welcomed the adoption of the national strategy for the protection of human rights in Georgia and its action plan.
44. Ireland commended Georgia for hosting several visits of the special procedure mandate holders and for responding to the majority of their communications. Ireland noted ongoing concerns, including the use of pretrial detention as a preventive measure and the timeliness of trials.
45. Italy welcomed the adoption of the national strategy for the protection of human rights and its corresponding action plan, as well as the plan for the elimination of domestic violence. It expressed appreciation for the establishment of a State agency for religious issues.
46. Japan commended Georgia for the adoption of the Law on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination in May 2014, but noted that the participation of women in policymaking processes, as recommended during the first review cycle, had reportedly not improved.
47. Latvia valued the cooperation and openness of Georgia with the special procedure mandate holders. It regretted that those mandate holders had been unable to visit the occupied territories in view of the deteriorating human rights situation in Abkhazia and South Ossetia.

48. Lithuania welcomed progress made in the reform of the judiciary, the strengthening of the independence of the High Council of Justice and the strengthening of the Legal Aid Service. It commended efforts to ensure decent conditions for all internally displaced persons and refugees.

49. Mexico welcomed the decision to allocate resources for the Public Defender and acknowledged the efforts made to strengthen the normative human rights framework, through the adoption of the human rights strategy and other measures.

50. Montenegro welcomed progress made between the two review cycles and expressed appreciation for the amendments made in 2014 to the Prison Code. It asked for more information on measures taken to ensure the independence and accountability of the Prosecutor's Office.

51. Morocco said it was encouraged by the adoption of the action plan against torture, the reform of the judiciary and the lifting of restrictions on freedom of expression. It welcomed the adoption of the action plan against domestic violence.

52. Myanmar commended Georgia for ensuring equal opportunities for persons with disabilities and for having ratified the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities.

53. Namibia took note of the significant steps undertaken in the field of judicial reform and encouraged Georgia to take further action improve the independence and depoliticization of the judiciary.

54. The Netherlands noted challenges in the fields of women's rights, rule of law and the conduct of law enforcement, and expressed its appreciation for the process of domestic reform.

55. Nigeria expressed concern about alleged arbitrary arrests and ill-treatment of members of minority groups and foreigners by law enforcement officials, and called on Georgia to comply with its human rights obligations to all persons in accordance with international law.

56. Norway urged Georgia to ensure that ongoing reforms led to institutional guarantees of the independence of the judiciary. It was concerned that Georgia was still plagued by poor prison conditions and about attitudes in society towards minorities.

57. Oman highly appreciated efforts undertaken by Georgia to introduce a national action plan for the 2014-2016 period to promote equal opportunities for persons with disabilities and the guarantee in law of free public education for all.

58. Panama drew attention to progress achieved in the area of children and welcomed the fact that Georgia had ratified numerous human rights instruments.

59. In responding to the issues raised, Georgia put special emphasis on the building of institutional democracy and the system of functional institutions through changing both institutions and institutional culture. The latest judicial reforms were aimed at depoliticizing the High Council of Justice and ensuring the transparency of the judiciary, as well as providing for greater transparency of judicial proceedings, the independence of judges and their involvement in the management of the courts. Judges were now elected based on two criteria: integrity and competence. All judges would be selected through open competition, and additional guarantees of non-interference with judiciary would be put in place.

60. Georgia stated that, following the reforms, administrative functions in the judiciary would be implemented by court managers; chairs of the courts would no longer possess that function. Only the High Council of Justice would be able to initiate disciplinary proceedings against judges. Automatic allocation of cases to individual judges would be introduced and judges could be moved to different courts only on the basis of their consent. Disciplinary proceedings would also be refined.

61. Georgia noted that, under the recently adopted Juvenile Justice Code, cases involving juveniles would be handled by specially trained judges, prosecutors, probation officers and other professionals. Mediation and alternative sanctions to imprisonment would also be used.

62. Georgia stated that it attached particular importance to the accountability and oversight of criminal proceedings. That function was implemented by the Chief Prosecutor's office. Since 2014, thorough reform had been under way. For example, the Council would be vested with powers to conduct investigations of the Chief Prosecutor, if necessary.

63. Georgia reiterated that combating torture had become a top priority and enumerated its own observations concerning the elimination of systematic torture since 2012 and the findings of the Special Rapporteur. In May 2015, a national anti-torture action plan had been adopted. Georgia recognized that systemic work on the issues needed to continue.

64. Turning to the issue of pretrial detention, Georgia underlined the introduction of the principle of periodic and automatic review of pretrial detention, under which a judge had to review such detention at least once every two months. Georgia highlighted the reduction in the use of pretrial detention from 54 per cent of cases in 2010 to 32 per cent in 2014.

65. In relation to prison conditions, Georgia highlighted the improvements and the positive assessments of international mechanisms, including the Council of Europe Commissioner for Human Rights. Problems related to overcrowding and health care were being tackled. The prison population had decreased from 24,000 to 10,200 people, and minimum space per inmate had increased from 2 m² to 4 m². Improvements in health-care infrastructure and services had led to a decrease in mortality in prisons, from 144 deaths in 2011 to 11 deaths in October 2015. Similarly, the number of new cases of tuberculosis had decreased from 601 in 2012 to 49 in 2015. Numerous programmes were being implemented, including by international and local civil society actors. The number of convicted juveniles had fallen to 25 and they had full access to education provided by a public school. Since 2012, two prisons had been closed down and numerous others had been refurbished. Halfway houses had been introduced, with the goal of preparing prisoners for release.

66. Turning to non-discrimination, Georgia noted that the new anti-discrimination law included a non-exhaustive list of the grounds of discrimination and outlined the activities of the Public Defender in monitoring implementation of the law.

67. Georgia highlighted its close cooperation with United Nations agencies in the implementation of the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities.

68. Georgia shared the concerns expressed about gender-based violence. Since 2014, the inter-agency council on domestic violence had restarted its work with a renewed composition. The group had the power to grant the status of victim of domestic violence. Subsequent to relevant training, the group had become operational in 2015. Furthermore, an advisory council, comprising civil society and international organizations, including the United Nations Entity for Gender Equality and the Empowerment of Women (UN-Women), had been set up. New action plans would be developed in 2016. Georgia provided statistics on the reporting and prosecution of cases which indicated the progress achieved with the measures taken to date.

69. Paraguay welcomed the adoption of the Law on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination and the ratification of the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities. It regretted the continuing situation of internal displacement and expressed concerns with regard to violence against women.
70. The Philippines noted the institutional and legislative reforms introduced to improve the criminal justice and penitentiary systems of Georgia and to widen protection of victims of trafficking, especially children.
71. Poland recalled the invitation of the Secretary-General to all stakeholders to grant unimpeded access to OHCHR to monitor, report on and address the human rights situation in the Abkhazia and Tskhinvali/South Ossetia regions of Georgia.
72. Portugal commended the submission by Georgia of a midterm progress report on the implementation of the universal periodic review recommendations and welcomed the ratification of the instruments relating to statelessness and the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities.
73. The Republic of Korea welcomed the adoption of the Law on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination and the Juvenile Justice Code. It noted the adoption of the action plan for combating domestic violence.
74. The Republic of Moldova noted the good coordination of State actions in the area of human rights. It recognized the achievements of Georgia in respect of the integration of minorities, juvenile justice and the combating of torture.
75. The Russian Federation was concerned that its recommendations in the first review cycle had been disregarded. It disagreed that the situation in Abkhazia and South Ossetia could be considered in the present review, as their sovereignty had been recognized by others.
76. Rwanda welcomed the adoption of the Law on Gender Equality and the health strategy aimed at promoting the health of mothers and children. It commended the action plan and measures for combating domestic violence.
77. Serbia welcomed the strengthening of the normative and institutional human rights framework, the adoption of the anti-discrimination law and the designation of the Public Defender to monitor its implementation.
78. Sierra Leone commended recent developments. It urged Georgia, inter alia, to take steps to improve religious tolerance, condemn hate speech and acts of violence against religious minorities and facilitate the birth registration of Roma.
79. Singapore noted the positive steps taken by Georgia, including the adoption of the national human rights strategy and action plan, the plan on gender equality and the Law on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination.
80. Slovakia commended the ratification of several human rights instruments and other measures undertaken by Georgia. It was concerned about freedom of the media and called upon Georgia to ensure pluralism of the media in compliance with international standards.
81. Slovenia noted positive developments such as legislative progress in the area of discrimination and gender equality. It referred to calls from international organizations for more attention to be given to the situation of human rights in South Ossetia and Abkhazia.
82. Spain welcomed the accession of Georgia to the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities, the adoption of a new action plan against torture and the process of improving the prison system. Also, it assessed positively the development of a strategy for internally displaced persons.

83. Sweden commended the adoption of the Law on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination and considered the establishment of an efficient mechanism for implementing that law to be critical. It noted that more needed to be done to implement legislation on gender equality.
84. Switzerland was concerned by persistent deficiencies in the judiciary. It noted that 17 per cent of girls were married before their eighteenth birthday and recalled that the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women had recommended that Georgia adapt the civil code so as to prevent forced marriage.
85. Tajikistan took note of the readiness of Georgia to cooperate with activities promoting human rights and of its efforts to strengthen and protect human rights through the advancement of its regulatory and legislative framework.
86. The former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia noted with concern the increasing death toll among women as a result of domestic violence, developments regarding the high dropout rate of minority students, especially girls, and the continued practice of early marriage.
87. Turkey commended achievements in the area of violence against women and gender equality and reform of the judiciary. It encouraged Georgia to continue addressing the difficulties encountered by Meskhetian Turks with regard to acquiring citizenship, language learning, education and employment.
88. Turkmenistan commended Georgia for appointing a human rights adviser to the President, an assistant to the Prime Minister on human rights and gender equality issues, and an ambassador-at-large on human rights within the Ministry of Foreign Affairs.
89. Ukraine encouraged Georgia to increase awareness among internally displaced persons of their rights and the support programmes available to them, to shift from status-based to need-based assistance for such persons, and to develop a system of probation and alternative sanctions.
90. The United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland welcomed significant progress on human rights reform. It encouraged Georgia to continue judicial reform, and to ensure a pluralistic media landscape for free and fair elections in 2016.
91. The United States of America commended reforms made by Georgia in several fields. It was concerned, inter alia, about shortcomings in the legal system and the absence of international monitors in the parts of Georgia's territory that it did not control.
92. Uruguay praised the inclusive process of preparation of the national report, the establishment of a committee to follow up recommendations and the submission of a midterm report. It welcomed the efforts of Georgia to protect the human rights of refugees.
93. Albania commended the Government for recent developments in legislation, including the adoption of the anti-discrimination law and the human rights strategy and action plan, monitored by the Human Rights Secretariat and the Human Rights Inter-agency Council.
94. Algeria welcomed the efforts to further adapt Georgia's national human rights legal framework to universal standards. It praised the reform of the judiciary initiated in 2012 and the significant improvements introduced in the prison system.
95. Andorra was particularly pleased by the recent ratification of the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities, as well as the Council of Europe Convention on the Protection of Children against Sexual Exploitation and Sexual Abuse.
96. Argentina commended the national process of Georgia for following up on recommendations and the adoption of the Law on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination. It was concerned by acts of physical violence and harassment of sexual minorities.

97. Armenia commended Georgia for the adoption of a comprehensive human rights strategy, along with the national action plan for its implementation, and welcomed the steps taken towards the preservation and promotion of cultural and ethnic diversity in the country.

98. Australia welcomed the increased level of media freedom and the improvement in prison conditions. It urged the de facto authorities in Abkhazia and South Ossetia to provide for credible international human rights monitoring.

99. Austria commended Georgia for the ratification of the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities and asked the delegation how efforts to comprehensively implement it would be strengthened. Austria was concerned about ill-treatment and torture and the level of participation of women in public life.

100. Belarus said that Georgia deserved high marks for its approach to implementing recommendations from the first review cycle. It welcomed the adoption of the national action plan for combating domestic violence and the action plan for gender equality.

101. Belgium welcomed the adoption of a law and plan of action on gender equality, as well as a general law against discrimination. It was concerned at the absence of key institutions related to the rule of law.

102. Bosnia and Herzegovina commended the inclusive consultation process in the preparation of the national report. It also commended the ratification of the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities and the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the involvement of children in armed conflict.

103. Botswana appreciated the adoption of the human rights action plan and strategy and other measures. It commended efforts to address women's rights and domestic violence but was concerned at reports of intolerance against members of religious minorities and of child marriage.

104. Brazil commended progress since the first review, including the ratification of several international human rights instruments and the adoption of human rights action plans and strategies. It was concerned about a lack of access to family planning services.

105. Bulgaria appreciated the creation of the national coordination mechanism for the national human rights strategy and action plan. It commended the adoption of the comprehensive anti-discrimination law and noted prison health-care reforms.

106. Canada welcomed improvements to democracy in Georgia and to the operating environment for the media and civil society. It encouraged Georgia to develop a strategy to better integrate women in governmental decision-making.

107. Chile drew attention to the adoption of the human rights strategy for 2014-2020 and its plan of action, and commended the reforms to the operational organization of the judiciary.

108. China was pleased by the development of the human rights strategy and action plan, the economic and social development strategy and the civic, equality and integration strategy and action plan. It welcomed the ratification of the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities.

109. Colombia drew attention to the 2014 Law on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination and to progress made in women's rights through the adoption of legislation against gender discrimination.

110. Costa Rica noted the adoption of the national strategy for human rights and its action plan. It also noted shortcomings with regard to guaranteeing due process and unequal allocation of public resources to political parties.

111. Noting the contributions from several States on the issue during the interactive dialogue, Georgia emphasized that freedom of the media and freedom of expression lay at the heart of its priorities. Numerous reforms to facilitate media pluralism had been implemented, including legislative enactments and institutional safeguards. It provided details on the number of channels available since the digital switchover and highlighted its improved ranking in the various indices of world media freedom.

112. Georgia reiterated that the Russian Federation continued to occupy two of its regions, in violation of the Charter of the United Nations, norms and principles of international law, the 12 August 2008 ceasefire agreement brokered by the European Union, and all Security Council and General Assembly resolutions on Georgia. Georgia stated that due to the occupation it was not in a position to effectively protect the rights of its compatriots in those territories. It also stated that the illegal military presence and effective control of the occupied territories of Georgia by the Russian Federation made that State an occupying power. Until the complete end of the occupation of Georgia, the responsibility for the situation in the occupied territories rested with the Russian Federation.

113. Georgia stated that a range of legislative provisions and concrete activities had been implemented to guarantee protection of the rights of ethnic minorities and to ensure their involvement in civic processes. Under the Georgian Criminal Code, crimes committed on the basis of ethnic or national background were considered as having an aggravating circumstance. The adopted Law on State Language included provisions for the use of national minority languages in the regions with a large minority population. With respect to the Roma, programmes for their registration, as well as their education, had also been implemented. Ethnic minorities had access to all levels of education, and State language programmes had been implemented for them.

114. Georgia indicated that the participation of ethnic minorities in political processes was ensured. Access by ethnic minorities to information and the media was provided, including through broadcasting in five minority languages.

115. In closing, Georgia thanked the delegations that had contributed to the review, including those which had submitted questions in advance, and in particular those which had referred to the need to address the human rights situation in the Georgian regions of Abkhazia and Tskhinvali region/South Ossetia.
