HUMAN RIGHTS COUNCIL
Working Group on the Universal Periodic Review
Second session
Geneva, 5-16 May 2008

NATIONAL REPORT SUBMITTED IN ACCORDANCE WITH PARAGRAPH 15(a) OF THE ANNEX TO HUMAN RIGHTS COUNCIL RESOLUTION 5/1

Guatemala

* The present document was not edited before being sent to the United Nations translation services.

I. DESCRIPTION OF METHODOLOGY

1. In accordance with the general guidelines for the preparation of national reports under the universal periodic review established by the Human Rights Council, the present report was drawn up within the framework of a broad consultation process involving all three branches of State.
2. Civil society was not involved in this initial exercise, since the focus was placed on State institutions, taking into account that civil society has prepared its own report and already has an established role in the process. However, consideration is being given to sharing this report with civil society, so that the latter can contribute to implementing the results of the universal periodic review.
3. The process was conducted at two levels, at a technical level, under the responsibility of the Presidential Commission for Coordinating Executive Policy in the field of Human Rights (COPREDEH), involving technical representatives of the three branches of State; and at a policy level, under the coordination of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, involving the most senior representatives of the executive, legislative and judicial branches, and officials from decentralized, autonomous State institutions.
4. It is worth noting that both levels benefited from the help and technical support of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights in Guatemala.
5. As part of the preparatory work prior to the consultation of institutions an information seminar for government institutions was given in December 2007 by experts from the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights in Guatemala, which led to closer contacts with the executive branch.
6. In January 2008 a methodology was implemented for the process of drawing up the technical report involving the following actions: (a) a meeting at which the institutions concerned were provided with a matrix for compilation of relevant information; (b) a workshop, in which thematic working groups were set up to analyse and discuss the information that had been gathered, and which concluded with a plenary meeting to reach a consensus on the information and consolidate the preliminary report for final revision.
7. After that two meetings were held in the High-Level Commission on human rights,¹ in order to revise and adopt the final report.
8. It is important to note that this commission is a standing body which, once the present report has been dispatched, will be responsible for coordinating the official delegation that will represent the State during the interactive dialogue phase of the universal periodic review that is due to take place in Geneva, Switzerland, on 6 May. The commission will also be in charge of following up whatever results and recommendations emerge from the universal periodic review.
9. The State of Guatemala wishes to point out that the above preparations provided an important opportunity for internal review (identification of achievements, challenges and outlook) of the institutional human rights machinery, in relation to the mandate and sphere of competence of the institutions involved in the work. This ensures that human rights continue to feature in the State's plans and programmes, and that actions planned for the short, medium and long term are duly implemented.

10. This inclusive and participatory approach made it possible to incorporate the different points of view of contributors and consequently resulted in greater institutional awareness of the importance of human rights and the need to promote, protect and enforce them in the different areas of institutional work.

II. BACKGROUND AND NORMATIVE AND INSTITUTIONAL FRAMEWORK FOR THE PROMOTION AND PROTECTION OF HUMAN RIGHTS

A. Background

11. Guatemala has a population of approximately 12 million inhabitants, with a rich cultural diversity deriving from 23 peoples of Mayan descent, including the Garífuna and Xinka peoples. It is a country with a young population, since over 80 per cent of its inhabitants are under the age of 40.

12. The country's political history includes a regrettable 36-year period of internal armed conflict that started in the early 1960s and ended in December 1996, with the signing of the Agreement on a Firm and Lasting Peace.

13. The process of democratization in Guatemala began with the promulgation and implementation of the Political Constitution of the Republic of Guatemala, passed by the Constituent National Assembly in May 1985, which came into force in January 1986. It is based on human principles and values and incorporates an entire section on human rights, including civil, political, economic, social and cultural rights.

14. This Constitution brought about a restructuring of the legal institutional framework and led to the creation of new constitutional entities with the aim of strengthening democracy under the rule of law. These include: (a) the Constitutional Court, which is the highest body monitoring conformity with the Constitution, and whose case-law in recent years has strengthened the legal framework of human rights; (b) the Supreme Electoral Tribunal, the highest authority in electoral matters, whose mission is to safeguard the right to organize and to political participation of citizens and to strengthen the culture of democracy in Guatemala; (c) The Congressional Human Rights Committee, a pluralist body which is responsible for promoting the study and updating of human rights legislation in Guatemala, and for dealing with laws, agreements, treaties, provisions and recommendations for the defence, dissemination, promotion and enforcement of fundamental rights relating to human beings, their dignity, physical and mental integrity, and the improvement of their quality of life, as well as the achievement of the common good and peaceful coexistence in Guatemala; (d) the Human Rights Procurator, who is a Congressional Commissioner for the protection of the human rights guaranteed by the Political Constitution of the Republic of Guatemala, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, and the international treaties and conventions accepted and ratified by Guatemala.

15. The 1996 Agreement on a Firm and Lasting Peace incorporates the 10 peace agreements² signed on the basis of the Framework Agreement on Democratization in the Search for Peace by Political Means, signed at Querétaro, Mexico, on 25 July 1991. Within the framework of these agreements the State has entered into a number of commitments related to the exercise and protection of human rights, in particular the Comprehensive Agreement on Human Rights, which has been in force since 1994.

16. These commitments, initially of a political nature and based on good will, were made legally binding by Legislative Decree No. 52-2500, the Framework Law concerning the Peace Agreements, the aim of which is to establish norms and mechanisms to regulate and guide the process of implementation of the peace agreements, as part of the State's constitutional obligations to protect individuals and their families, achieve the common good and guarantee its inhabitants life, freedom, justice, security, peace and full personal development, which must be conducted as part of a participatory process, promoting the common good and devoted to meeting the needs of the population.

17. In 1994, prior to the signature of the Agreement on a Firm and Lasting Peace, the United Nations Verification Mission in Guatemala (MINUGUA) was established with the support of the United Nations, and played an important role in achieving the peace agreements and in guiding the State's fulfilment of the resulting commitments, during the 10 years of its operation in Guatemala, before the expiry of its mandate in 2004.

18. When MINUGUA's mandate³ expired, on 31 May 2005, the Congress approved the Agreement⁴ to establish an Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights in Guatemala, which plays a twofold role of technical cooperation and supervision, and whose mandate expires in September 2008.

19. One positive outcome of the end of the internal armed conflict was the establishment of an institutional structure for peace, a noteworthy feature of which was the important work carried out by the Historical Clarification Commission. At the end of its mandate, the Commission issued a report containing a number of recommendations, which have been gradually implemented by the State.

20. In addition, joint bodies with specific mandates were established, which have contributed to the promotion of human rights in Guatemala. These include the Committee on Educational Reform, whose work has been useful in bringing about a culture of peace in Guatemala and in placing the focus on human rights, gender equality and multiculturalism in the national formal and non-formal education system, and the Committee to Support the Strengthening of the Justice Sector (now the Committee for Reform of the Justice Sector), which has helped to strengthen the rule of law.

21. In a further step towards the consolidation of democracy, on 14 January 2008, following free, transparent and popular elections, the third Government to be democratically elected since the signing of the peace agreements took office; its priorities include rural development, education and health, public safety, the fiscal pact and indigenous peoples.

22. It is worth noting, in the context of this change of Government, that the outgoing Government took the unprecedented step of launching a process of "institutional transition", with the aim of ensuring the continuity of, and follow-up to, the measures taken over the previous four years, which had a positive social impact on Guatemalans.

B. Normative framework

23. Guatemala has gradually consolidated a legal infrastructure with an increasingly specific focus on respect for human rights, as enshrined in particular in article 46 of the Constitution, on the primacy of international law: "It is established as a general principle that, in matters of human rights, treaties and conventions accepted and ratified by Guatemala take precedence over internal law."

24. Also, in the international context, Guatemala is party to the United Nations International Bill of Human Rights, the body of United Nations human rights treaties, and other universal and regional instruments.

25. With regard to convention mechanisms, with the exception of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination, which is in the process of being approved at national level, the State has accepted the competence of all the committees established under treaties providing a mechanism of individual complaints that allow the committees to hear cases against the State.

26. In the regional context, Guatemala is party to the American Convention on Human Rights, and has recognized the jurisdiction of the Inter-American Court of Human Rights. Guatemala is also party to other regional conventions such as the Inter-American Convention to Prevent and Punish Torture and the Inter-American Convention on Forced Disappearance of Persons.

27. The adoption of international human rights norms initiated a process of ratification and alignment of existing domestic legislation. Important national laws have been adopted, such as the Comprehensive Child Protection Act,⁵ complying with the Convention on the Rights of the Child, which establishes the primacy of the best interests of the child.

28. Another such law is the Prison Regime Act,⁶ which incorporates international principles and norms concerning persons deprived of liberty, such as the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, and which states, in article 2, that: “the prison system must aim at the social rehabilitation and reformation of prisoners and must comply with the relevant norms established by the Political Constitution of the Republic and the international human rights agreements and treaties to which Guatemala is party, and with the provisions of ordinary laws”.

29. In compliance with the Hague Convention on Protection of Children and Cooperation in respect of Intercountry Adoption, the National Adoption Act was adopted in December 2007.

30. With regard to domestic legislative reform, the Criminal Code has been amended in the following areas: (a) qualification of the crime of trafficking in persons, in line with the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime and its supplementing protocols: Protocol against the Smuggling of Migrants by Land, Sea and Air, and Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons Especially Women and Children. This measure was strengthened by the adoption of a National Policy Against Trafficking in Persons and an Action Plan 2007-2017; (b) qualification of the crime of racial discrimination, in line with the peace agreements and the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination.

31. In order to continue strengthening the national legal framework for human rights, the State of Guatemala is currently, via the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, carrying out a process of internal consultation, with the aim of submitting the International Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance and the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities to the Congress for adoption. To this end, two working groups have been set up in order to speed up the process. A similar procedure took place for the adoption of the Optional Protocol to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, which will be deposited as soon as possible.

32. Still within the internal legal framework, a number of national policies and plans have been adopted, which have an impact on the exercise of human rights. These include: the National Human Rights Policy and associated National Action Plan; the National Human Rights Education Policy; the National Policy on the Prevention of Juvenile Violence; the Public Policy against Trafficking in Persons and on Comprehensive Care for Victims; the Public Policy for Peaceful Co-Existence and the Elimination of Racism and Racial Discrimination; and the National Policy for Promoting Equality of Guatemalan Women.

33. Other legislative and public policy initiatives are currently being discussed in different forums, with a view to their subsequent adoption. These include: the Public Policy on Human Rights Defenders; draft legislation on the National Compensation Plan; and draft legislation on the establishment of a National Commission to Locate Disappeared Persons.

34. There is also a range of draft legislation and amendments to existing legislation on matters that are of great importance for the exercise of women's human rights, including: qualification of the crime of femicide; the qualification of domestic violence; and legislation on sexual assault and domestic work.

35. With regard to the strengthening of bodies responsible for public safety, a draft Security System Framework Act is at the final stage of examination by the Congress, with a view to its adoption.

C. Institutions for the protection and promotion of human rights

36. Guatemala's efforts in building an institutional structure for human rights have resulted to date in: (a) the establishment in 1985 of the Office of Human Rights Procurator, who is a Congressional Commissioner for the protection of human rights; (b) the establishment in 1992 of the Presidential Commission for Coordinating Executive Policy in the field of Human Rights (COPREDEH), at the recommendation of the then United Nations independent expert for Guatemala, Christian Tomuschat, with the aim of establishing a national mechanism at the level of the executive for monitoring human rights issues. Currently this commission is in the process of merging with the Peace Secretariat, with the aim of strengthening its mandate and improving coordination of domestic human rights issues with Guatemala's international commitments in this area, and providing appropriate advice to the President of the Republic, on issues of national impact in this area.

37. One of the fundamental aspects of developing human rights institutions in Guatemala has been to increase knowledge and awareness of the importance of the State itself respecting, promoting and implementing human rights.

38. This has resulted, in the last five years, in the establishment of human rights units, sections or working groups within State bodies and structures. These include: the Human Rights Unit within the Ministry of Defence; the Human Rights Unit within the Office of the National Procurator-General; and the Human Rights Defenders, Journalists and Judges Unit within the Presidential Human Rights Commission.

39. Further bodies include the units for human rights, domestic violence, gender and the defence of indigenous rights within the structure of the Public Criminal Defence Institute; the Office of the Special Prosecutor for Human Rights; the Office of the Special Prosecutor for Offences Against Life; the Office of the Divisional Prosecutor for Offences Against Human Rights Activists; and the Special Unit for Trafficking and Irregular Adoptions within the Public Prosecutor's Office.

40. At the specific recommendation of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights in Guatemala, a Unit for the Analysis of Attacks against Human Rights Defenders in Guatemala was established by Government Agreement No. 103-2008 within the Criminal Investigation Division (DINC). Within this division, the following units also operate: the Human Rights Office, which directly supports the unit of the Public Prosecutor's Office for Offences Against Human Rights Activists; the Human Rights and Victim-care Unit; and the Multiculturalism Division, which operates within the Subdirector General for Crime Prevention. Recently, preparatory work was started on the establishment of special units for human rights and indigenous peoples within the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, in order to improve the handling of those issues.

41. For the protection of particularly vulnerable groups, bodies such as the following have been set up: the Food Security Secretariat (SESAN); the Presidential Secretariat for Women (SEPREM); the National Commission for the Prevention of Domestic Violence (CONAPREVI); the Presidential Commission on Discrimination and Racism against Indigenous Peoples in Guatemala (CODISRA); the National Adoption Council; the National Commission for Children and Young Persons; National Commission for Migrants; and, recently, the Council for Social Cohesion, for the coordination of measures to care for the most vulnerable groups.

42. Similarly, other bodies for the promotion and respect of human rights were set up in accordance with the commitments arising from the peace agreements, including: the Peace Secretariat (SEPAZ); the National Council for Peace Agreements; the Office of the Ombudsman for Indigenous Women (DEMI); the National Compensation Plan; the Guatemalan Fund for Indigenous Development (FODIGUA); and the National Fund for Peace (FONAPAZ).

43. In the area of international humanitarian law, the Guatemalan Commission for the Promotion of International Humanitarian Law (COGUADIH) was set up as a multidisciplinary, inter-institutional body established by legislative decree of the Congress to advise the Government in the area of international humanitarian law and to promote national and international norms in this field.

III. PROMOTION AND PROTECTION OF HUMAN RIGHTS IN THE FIELD

44. One of the main challenges the State has had to overcome in order to achieve effective protection of human rights concerns the strengthening of the State's institutional structure, particularly in the area of public safety and the administration of justice.

45. In this connection, important measures have been adopted to strengthen national bodies responsible for public safety, such as the gradual purging, professionalization and equipment of the National Civil Police, including amendments to the disciplinary regulations of this institution to establish provisions for the prohibition of the practice of torture and cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment against persons handled by the police or who are in their custody or under their protection.

46. As part of the effort to combat impunity in Guatemala, the International Commission against Impunity in Guatemala (CICIG) was established, following a heated internal debate between various sectors of society, continuous lobbying and the achievement of a consensus for its adoption, with the support of the United Nations. Few examples of this type of mechanism exist in the world, but the State was determined to adopt it in order to comply with its obligation to guarantee and protect human rights.

47. One of the actions that has had a major impact on respect for human rights has been the establishment by the judiciary of rota courts⁷ in the department of Guatemala,⁸ as one of the measures the judiciary has taken to ensure people's access to the permanent justice system, thereby guaranteeing due process and avoiding the possibility of human rights violations. This initiative is being implemented gradually, starting with rota courts in the capital city, but the aim is to extend its coverage, to which end the necessary resources are being secured for its extension to national level.

48. It is worth noting that the establishment of these rota courts has considerably reduced the risk of abuse of authority against detained persons, ensuring swifter proceedings and better respect for their human rights, particularly in relation to their physical integrity.

49. In the same area, the Public Criminal Defence Institute also has regional offices that work on a 24-hour basis to provide public criminal defence.

50. With regard to the access to justice of indigenous peoples, there are currently translators and interpreters of Mayan languages in 62 out of 360 courts in the Republic of Guatemala, which amounts to 17.22 per cent coverage, although in some cases interpreters may provide their services to another court when necessary and requested by the judge.

51. In order to promote measures to help improve the human rights situation in the field, through the active participation of all government institutions, an Inter-institutional Standing Human Rights Forum was established in 1997, under the coordination of COPREDEH. Participants include institutional delegates from all ministries, secretariats, social funds and autonomous and decentralized bodies, with the aim of promoting and providing follow-up to the State's commitments in the area of human rights.

A. Actions undertaken for the protection of human rights

52. A National Human Rights Policy was published in December 2005, and the National Human Rights Action Plan in December 2007, in fulfilment of the commitments undertaken under the Vienna Programme of Action. Both of these are in the process of being adopted by Government Agreement with a view to their institutionalization.

53. Thanks to the State's "open-door policy towards international human rights monitoring mechanisms", adopted in 2001, approximately 18 visits to Guatemala by extra-conventional mechanisms have so far taken place. These visits include those carried out by thematic rapporteurs and field visits by experts of the inter-American human rights system.

54. It is also important to note that the State has appeared before various United Nations treaty monitoring bodies, at dates set by those bodies, for the evaluation of its reports as a State party. This in turn has led to a series of actions by State institutions aimed at follow-up to, and implementation of, the recommendations made by each of the committees.

55. Over the last five years Guatemala has adopted important international human rights instruments.

56. These include the Optional Protocol to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, the objective of which is to establish a national mechanism for visits to places where people are deprived of their liberty; the two Optional Protocols to the Convention on the Rights of the Child; the Hague Convention on Protection of Children and Cooperation in respect of Intercountry Adoption. It accepted the competence of the Committee on Migrant Workers to hear individual complaints.⁹ It established the Register of Guatemalans Abroad,¹⁰ designed to provide accurate, quantifiable data on Guatemalan migrants, and introduced the consular registration card to provide proof of registration. It also ratified the Protocol on Explosive Remnants of War (Protocol V)¹¹ to the Convention on Prohibitions or Restrictions on the Use of Certain Conventional Weapons Which May Be Deemed to Be Excessively Injurious or to Have Indiscriminate Effects.

B. Actions for the promotion of human rights

57. Under the Constitution, competence for human rights education in Guatemala falls to the Office of the Human Rights Procurator, which coordinates the process of human rights training and awareness-raising for public officials with other State bodies.

58. COPREDEH participates in the council of the National Civil Police Academy and has worked on curriculum subjects in the Ministry of National Defence with the aim of including human rights issues as specific or cross-cutting courses. It has also participated in other areas of work with the Ministry of Education.

59. The School for the Judiciary has systematically incorporated human rights and international humanitarian law issues in its curriculum, with special emphasis on vulnerable population groups such as women and children.

60. National awareness-raising campaigns in the area of racial discrimination have been conducted by the Presidential Commission on Discrimination and Racism against Indigenous Peoples (CODISRA), COPREDEH and the Office of the Ombudsman for Indigenous Women.

61. In the area of torture, COPREDEH, in conjunction with the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, organized activities to promote the Optional Protocol to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, with civil society, the Congress of the Republic and national institutions.

IV. IDENTIFICATION OF ACHIEVEMENTS, BEST PRACTICES, CHALLENGES AND CONSTRAINTS

62. Some of the most sensitive problems faced by the State of Guatemala are related to the task of ensuring that human rights are guaranteed, respected, defended and protected. It is recognized that the high level of violence and impunity in Guatemala affects the population at an individual and collective level and, as such, constitutes one of the main difficulties in this respect. Nevertheless, a number of actions have been implemented that constitute progress in guaranteeing these rights, including the following:

- Establishing the National Forensic Science Institute (INACIF),¹² which started partial operation in 2007 with the aim of carrying out independent scientific investigations and issuing technical scientific opinions, and with competence at national level for strengthening criminal investigation
- Drafting of the strategic sectoral plan for criminal justice reform for the period 2006-2010 by the Coordinating Authority for the Modernization of the Justice Sector, which is comprised of State and civil society institutions, and establishes action lines and outcome indicators for measuring impact in strategic areas such as access to justice and transparency
- Establishing the International Commission against Impunity in Guatemala (CICIG)¹³ with a view to strengthening the justice sector and assisting the competent national bodies responsible for identifying and prosecuting groups that operate illegally and commit serious human rights violations. This measure has resulted in the signing of a Comprehensive Agreement on Human Rights between the United Nations and the State of Guatemala

- Adopting the National Security System Framework Act, which ends an intensive process of discussion and consensus-building initiated years ago. This Act has established the State Intelligence Department which, through an inter-agency system, will coordinate the activities and policies of all agencies involved in intelligence work. A new Legislative Commission has also been set up to monitor the national security system

63. With regard to best practices, Guatemala has maintained an open-door policy towards international human rights monitoring mechanisms, which has contributed to building inter-institutional momentum at the State level to promote human rights activities.

64. This policy has also opened up the opportunity for other important visits to Guatemala, in order to place greater emphasis on human rights issues. For instance, the visit in May 2006 by Louise Arbour, the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, was aimed at establishing direct relations with the country after the opening of the United Nations Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights in Guatemala in September 2005.

65. The country considers the joint effort between the Government of Guatemala and the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights in Guatemala an important step towards assessing the State's fulfilment of the recommendations issued by the treaty monitoring bodies. The results of this assessment will be transmitted in due course to the Government by the Office of the High Commissioner in Guatemala, with a view to developing a road map to refocus activities in that area.

66. In general terms, we may note that one of the most important challenges we must address as a country is achieving viability and sustainability of present and future activities and efforts in the field of human rights with a view to: (a) Combating impunity through the dismantling of transnational organized criminal groups that operate in the country and commit a great number of human rights violations; (b) Strengthening institutions responsible for public safety and justice administration in order to combat impunity; (c) Achieving an appropriate legal framework that provides better protection for vulnerable groups such as women, children, migrants and persons with special needs. With regard to economic, social and cultural rights, challenges include: (a) Generating sustainable sources of employment; (b) Expanding coverage of and greater investment in basic service provision; and (c) Reducing levels of malnutrition and chronic malnutrition.

67. In concrete terms, challenges include strengthening the institutional aspect and pursuing the modernization of the justice system, in order to contribute to the decentralization of services and to expand coverage in accordance with the cultural and linguistic characteristics of each of the country's regions.

68. With regard to criminal investigation prosecution, the challenges are to: (a) Continue establishing the National Forensic Science Institute (INACIF); (b) Effectively operate the DNA laboratory; (c) Progressively rebuild all existing 29 morgues in the country; (d) Establish adequate coordination between national bodies and the International Commission against Impunity in Guatemala in order to achieve better results; (e) Facilitate the establishment of 2,000 investigator posts with a view to strengthening and improving the responsiveness of the Office of the Public Prosecutor, since there are currently only 200 investigators. This is a process that will require much funding, so that another obstacle to be overcome will be the limited economic resources available.

69. In order to achieve effective public safety, the process of purging and professionalizing the National Civil Police must be continued and institutional capacity must be established to meet the population's needs. In this regard, it is necessary to: (a) Ensure the preparation, discussion, and approval by the Cabinet of the initiative to reform the National Civil Police Organization Act (introducing popular election of senior police officers, official profiles, recruitment, etc.); (b) Recruit at least 800 new National Civil Police officers and 200 assistant investigators, with the required equipment (weapons, patrols, motorbikes and so forth); (c) Strengthen the Office of Professional Accountability of the National Civil Police to combat internal corruption; (d) Establish a professional counter-intelligence group under the auspices of the Ministry of the Interior; (e) Complete the registration of persons placed in temporary detention and the sentences being served; (f) Implement the prison system's computing system with a view to providing the country's prisons with accurate information so that the duration of sentences may be monitored adequately; (g) Take steps to reduce and prevent overcrowding in prisons.

70. With a view to strengthening domestic human rights legislation, it is necessary to: (a) Ensure the adoption by Government Agreement of the National Human Rights Policy and National Human Rights Action Plan, which were made public in 2005 and 2007 respectively; (b) Proceed with the revision and discussion of the inventory of measures to protect human rights defenders, and validate it through a Government Agreement; (c) Continue to promote measures for the adoption of the International Convention for the Protection of all Persons from Enforced Disappearance and the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities, and for acceptance of the competence of the Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination.

71. In the context of the peace agreements, a comprehensive approach to reparation should be ensured for all victims.

State commitments for the promotion, protection and enforcement of human rights

72. In order to improve the effective enjoyment of human rights in the field, the State of Guatemala undertakes to:

- Ratify the open-door policy towards international human rights monitoring mechanisms
- Renew the mandate of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights established in Guatemala, for the period from September 2008 to September 2011, taking into account that its mandate ends in September of this year
- Promote effective follow-up to the recommendations issued by the international monitoring mechanisms to the country in the field of human rights
- Encourage the legislature to adopt international instruments and other human rights initiatives
- Enter into other commitments considered necessary for the promotion, protection and enforcement of human rights in the country

V. EXPECTATIONS REGARDING CAPACITY-BUILDING AND POSSIBLE REQUESTS FOR TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE

73. With a view to strengthening national efforts to improve the effective enjoyment of human rights in the field, the State of Guatemala considers that both technical assistance and financial cooperation in this area should focus on:

- (a) Strengthening the existing capacity of human rights institutions in the country;
- (b) Contributing to the development of the National Human Rights Policy and National Human Rights Action Plan, with a view to fulfilling the State's international human rights commitments;
- (c) Supporting initiatives for the implementation of the recommendations of the treaty monitoring bodies, other international human rights monitoring mechanisms and other bodies contributing to the effective enjoyment of human rights in the country;
- (d) Providing technical and financial support to strengthen the national initiatives to modernize the justice sector and public safety outlined in the chapter on challenges faced by the State in the field of human rights;
- (e) Providing technical and financial support to strengthen national food safety measures.
