EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

The Christian community in India is concerned at the intensity of the targeted and communal violence directed against it almost on a pan India basis. Violence against Christians picked up in independent India in the early 1990s reaching its peak in 2008 – 2009 with more than 1000 incidents of violence and hate crimes reported against the Christian community. This continues today as vicious hate campaign, physical violence, police complicity, and State impunity contribute to the persecution of the Christian community in many states of India.

Human Rights and Civil Society groups have documented the death of at least two persons in 2014, killed for their Christian faith. The Persecution data lists partially, 147 cases. The two cases of death in communal anti Christian violence were reported from Orissa and Andhra Pradesh.

An analysis of the data shows Chhattisgarh topping the list with 28 incidents of crime, followed closely by neighbouring Madhya Pradesh with 26, Uttar Pradesh with 18 and Telengana, a newly carved out of Andhra Pradesh, with 15 incidents. Much of the violence has taken place after the new government of the National Democratic alliance headed by the Prime Minister, Mr. Narendra Modi, came into power on 26 Mary, 2014.

The violence peaked between August and October with 56 cases, before zooming up to 25 cases during the Christmas season. The violence has continued well into the New Year 2015, with more Catholic churches in the capital city of Delhi targeted as incidents continue in other states.

Much of the violence, 54 percent, is of threats, intimidation, coercion, often with the police looking on. Physical violence constituted a quarter of all cases, 24 per cent, and violence against Christian women, a trend that is increasingly being seen since the carnage in Kandhamal, Odisha, in 2007 and 2008, was 11 per cent. Breaking of statues and the Cross, and other acts of desecration were recorded in about 8 per cent of the cases, but many more were also consequent to other forms of violence against institutions. A disturbing trend was violence against Christians in West Bengal, where though one case was formally reported; there have been increasing incidents of hate speech and intimidation..

Police inaction and its failure to arrest the guilty in most cases, its propensity to try to minimise the crime, and in rural areas especially, its open partisanship has almost become the norm. Police ineptitude in forensic investigations has been seen even in New Delhi where four of the five cases in the months of December 2014 and January 2015 have seen no progress in the investigations. In the one case where there were arrests, the Church and the community have cast doubts on the police version of the motives of the suspects whose images were recorded in the Close Circuit TV cameras installed in the church.

The President of India, Mr. Pranab Mukherjee, noted the rise of communalism and the targeting of religious minorities in his address to the Nation on 25th January 2015, the eve of Republic Day. President Mukherjee said “In an international environment where so many countries are sinking into the morass of theocratic violence ... We have always reposed our trust in faith-equality where every faith is equal before the law and every culture blends into another to create a positive dynamic. The violence of the tongue cuts and wounds people’s hearts. The Indian Constitution is the holy book of democracy. It is a lodestar for the socio-economic transformation of an India whose civilisation has celebrated pluralism, advocated tolerance and promoted goodwill between diverse communities. These values, however, need to be preserved with utmost care and vigilance.”

Mr. Mukherjee touched a point that has worried many among even those who voted for Mr. Modi hoping he would bring about a change from the corruption and economic coma in which the country had found itself in the last few years. The Union and State governments have been dismissive of the Christian complaints of targeted violence and persecution, both by political non-State actors and other elements.

We demand that the government take urgent and effective measures to restore the Rule of law and curb the targeted and communal violence. The guilty must be traced, and action under the law should be taken. Police officers must be held accountable for communal crimes in their jurisdiction.

RECOMMENDATIONS TO THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA

● Enact a comprehensive hate crimes legislation to safeguard the rights of religious minorities.
● The Ministry of Home Affairs should provide trainings on human rights and religious freedom standards and practices to the state and central police and judiciary;
● Although maintenance of public order is a state responsibility, the central government should issue an advisory to the state governments to repeal the anti-conversion laws;
● The government should ensure an active Commission for Human Rights and Commission for Minorities is operational in every state, and that members of each commission are appointed by transparent and non-partisan procedures;
● Prevent and pursue through the judicial process, all violent acts against religious and tribal minorities and Dalits.
HATE CAMPAIGNS, TARGETTED VIOLENCE, FALSE ARRESTS AND IMPUNITY MARCH A TRAUMATIC 2014 FOR CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY IN INDIA

2 deaths in 149 cases of violence in the year. Desecration and destruction of home churches, violation of Constitutional rights of Freedom of Faith and assault on pastors dominate persecution list. But most cases go unreported, unrecorded by police. Chhattisgarh tops the list. Government silence encourages political groups espousing aggressive religious nationalism.

Mr. Sakshi Maharaj, a god-man, and an influential member of the Parliament on behalf of the Bharatiya Janata party which now governs India has demanded the death sentence for persons who convert [Hindu] persons to other religions. As Indian TV and Print media quoted him, the saffron-clad ascetic politician told a religious gathering in the state of Uttar Pradesh that each Hindu woman should mother four children in order to protect the predominance of Hindus, India’s largest religious group. "Wait for some time," local media him as saying. "A law will be passed in Parliament in which anyone indulging in cow slaughter and conversion will be punished with the death sentence." Maharaj said that Indians of Muslim, Christian and other religious faiths who convert to Hinduism, euphemistically Ghar Wapsi or Home-Coming, will not be subjected to the same punishment, as they were all once Hindus.

This is part of a vicious hate campaign that accompanied physical violence, many incidents of police complicity, and State impunity in the persecution of the Christian community in many states of India.

was waylaid and bludgeoned to death in a planned attack on the afternoon of 25th May 2014 in a neighbouring village called Dherubada in Orissa. He was from a neighbouring village called Vandidi. He had attended a prayer meeting and the baptism ceremony of his nine year old son, and was going home when killers caught up with him, strangled him and then smashed his head with a big stone. The second death was from Andhra Pradesh on 10th January, 2014 Where State police arrested seven of the eight members of the Hindu Vahini group accused of attacking pastor Orucanti Sanjeevi on Jan. 10 at his home in Vikarabad, 64 kilometers (39 miles) from the state capital of Hyderabad. Pastor Sanjeevi, 48, succumbed to his injuries on Jan. 13. “The key member of this module is Gandikota Srinu, alias RK, a full-time member of the Hindu Vahini, and these same people attempted to kill another pastor in Narketpally,” the police said. The Sangh group had stormed his house, and stabbed him. Police inaction and its failure to arrest the guilty in most cases, its propensity to try to minimise the crime, and in rural areas specially, its open partisanship has almost become the norm. Police ineptitude in forensic investigations has been seen even in New Delhi where four of the five cases in the months of December 2014 and January 2015 have seen no progress in the investigations. Mr. Mukherjee touched a point that has worried many among even those who voted for Mr. Modi hoping he would bring about a change from the corruption and economic coma in which the country had found itself in the last years of the Congress regime led by Prime Minister, Dr. Manmohan Singh. This was the increasing cacophony of many in the BJP, including some Ministers and Members of Parliament, who were supporting a demand that India mark itself out as a Hindu Rashtra or Nation, and stop appeasing Muslims, and Christians, both seen as enemies of the nation and the majority community. And some among them were quite stridently asking that the Constitution be scrapped and replaced by a more “nationalistic” one rooted not in western concepts but in India’s Hindu tradition.

It is not just fringe elements or political mavericks who suggest solutions that would be deemed anti-democratic even in military dictatorships – including disenfranchisement of religious groups, or asking Hindu women to produce ten or even more children to maintain a demographic superiority. There is a raging controversy now on a series of media advertisements by the national government that has illustrations of the illustrated Preamble of the Constitution without two crucial words “Secular” and “socialist”. These words were not there in the document that was signed on 26th January 1950, but were introduced in an amendment passed by parliament in the 1970s. Many of the social legislation that was passed in the closing decades of the last century, including employment for rural poor, and scholarships for Muslim youth in particular, were born of those two words. The noted lawyer and currently Union Minister for Information technology, Mr. Ravi Shankar Prasad, is among those who seem to endorse the debate on this issue. In a way, this is in line with the argument that had been advanced when Mr. Vajpayee was the Prime Minister at the head of the first National Democratic Alliance of the BJP, that the Constitution needed a comprehensive review. The talk in the highest quarter that the Constitution is better off without socialism and secularism has understandably sent shock waves among the rural poor, Tribals, Dalits, as well as Muslims and Christians. There is therefore a growing demand that the Modi government heed the President Mukherjee’s caution and stop political discourse becoming a competition in hysteria that is abhorrent to traditional ethos Constitutional values.

The Prime Minister, Mr. Modi, and the Home Minister, Mr. Rajnath Singh, have been dismissive of the Christian complaint of targeted violence and persecution, both by political non-State actors close to the ruling political dispensation of the Bharatiya Janata party. Mr. Modi and Mr. Singh were given memorandum when the violence was peaking in September 2014, but chose to disregard it. When a Christian delegation called on him on the eve of Christmas to greet him, he made it abundantly clear to them that he saw the “persecution” complaint as a media hype. He point blank refused to speak on “every incident.” Members of Opposition parties took the matter up in December 2014 in the Rajya Sabha after the burning if the St. Sebastian Church on 1 December, 2014. But though the proceedings of the House were disrupted for several days, the government chose not to assure the religious minorities of their security. The Prime Minister, and the president sand senior leadership of the BJP, also decided not to rebuke the those among their ranks targeting Christians and Muslims in their hate speeches. On the other hand, more than one Minister in Mr. Modi’s government extended support to the rhetoric of the Rashtriya Swayamsewak Sangh the umbrella organisation which has groups involved in mobilising and radicalising national sectors from Education to Tribals. Mr. Venkaiah Naidu, a firmer president if the Bharatiya Janata party and now a senior minister, supported the demand for a national law on Freedom of Religion, a euphemism for legal restrictions on conversions to what are called non-Indic religions, Christianity, and Islam. Several others functionaries have join this cry.

The year 2014 was a watershed in the history of India and in relations between religious communities in the ancient land. Mr. Narendra Modi, led by (the) Bharatiya Janata Party to a resounding victory in the general elections of 2014, riding a wave generated by his promise of “development” and assisted by a remarkable mass mobilization in one of the most politically surcharged general elections since the Republic came into existence in 1950. When the results were announced on 16th May 2014, the BJP had won 280 of the 542 seats, with no party getting even the statutory 10 per cent of the seats to claim the position of Leader of the Opposition.

The days, weeks and months since the historic victory, and his assuming office on 26th May 2014 as the 14th Prime Minister of India, have seen the rising pitch of a crescendo of hate speech against Muslims and Christians. Their identity derided, their patriotism scoffed at, their citizenship questioned, their faith mocked. The environment has degenerated into one of coercion, divisiveness, and suspicion. This has percolated to the small towns and villages or (of) rural India, severing bonds forged in a dialogue of life over the centuries, shattering the harmony built around the messages of peace and brotherhood given us by the Sufis and the men and women who led the Freedom Struggle under Mahatma Gandhi. The hate speeches have resonated in debates in the Chamber of the Lok Sabha – an exceptionally and aggressively provocative and virulent one by the BJP leader and lead speaker, Yogi Adityanath, in the debate on communal violence -- and in meetings, rallies and statements to the Media by leaders of the Rashtriya Swayamsewak Sangh and its associate organisations, collectively called the Sangh Parivar. Their focal points have been to rouse their cadres and others by sowing seeds of fear, listing “Love Jihad”, inter-community marriage, and conversions as conspiracies by religious minorities, specially Muslims and Christians, against the existence of the Hindu faith and Mother India. Adityanath, now head of a religious cult in Gorakhpur in Uttar Pradesh, got away with demonising the Muslim community and others. The hate campaign has mutated to a (being) more coercive and threatening, (percolating down) that has percolated to the Universities and colleges on the one hand and the villages and small towns over much of the country. One group even set up a “Hindu Help-line” to assist anyone from the majority community who is being harassed by Muslims, announcing its cadres will come to the help of any Hindu parent who suspects his or her daughter is seeing a Muslim youth.

Mr. Modi has not gone beyond an initial call for a “ten-year moratorium” on communal violence. This was in his 15th August Independence Day address, his first, in which he said:
“Communalism and casteism are an obstacle in the country’s progress. We see violence on the basis of religion and caste. How long? Who is benefiting? We have fought enough, killed enough I appeal that for the sake of country’s progress, there should be a 10-year moratorium on violence, at least for once, so that we are free from these ills.”

Inevitably, this failed to stop great violence. In just the first few weeks of the new government, by its own admission, A (a) total of 113 communal incidents have taken place in various parts of the country during May-June in which 15 people [not Christians] were killed and 318 others were injured, Minister of State for Home Affairs, Mr. Kiren Rijiju told the Rajya Sabha, the Upper House of Parliament. Many of the incidents of violence were directed against individuals and places of worship of the Muslim community, specially in Uttar Pradesh and Maharashtra. The state apparatus and specially the police often became a party arresting not the aggressors but the victims to satisfy the demands of the mob, as happening in Greater Noida, part of the National Capital region. There have attempts at religious profiling of Christian academic institutions (institutions) and their students in the national capital.

Civil society and public intellectuals have noted this. “The highest in the government and the Sangh Parivar are in unison in sending across the message that Islam is un-Indian and Muslims by and large anti-national. We must take these signs seriously because the implications of linking up religion and nationalism are bound to be disastrous.” Prof. Kancha Iliaih, senior scholar has noted that,

The internationally respected Economic and Political Weekly recently noted “If communal polarisation of the electorate to build a Hindutva vote bank was a constant presence in the general election campaign, it has only seen a sharpening in the, supposedly important, “first 100 days” of the BJP-led government in office. An important way in which this has been done is the strategy of the Sangh Parivar to calibrate communal violence and hate campaigns in a way so as to keep it “under the radar”. One of the ways of accomplishing this is to shift the locus of violence and mobilizations from the urban centres to small towns and rural areas; another course is to keep the “dead-count” low and use variants of everyday, “routine” violence to spread tensions and create panic. Yet another scheme is to convert India-Pakistan relations into a subset of the

"In the three months since Narendra Modi’s spectacular triumph, many corners of the country have begun to smoulder in slow fires of orchestrated hate and distrust against India’s Muslims…. The culpability for each of these clashes lies with the communal organisations bent on fomenting animosities. But it is shared equally by the shamefully weak-kneed (or actively prejudiced) responses of the state and district administrations in these states.... “

CHHATTISGARH AS A FOCUS STATE

Christians in Chhattisgarh, especially in the Bastar area, have been faced massive politically inspired opposition, which has manifested itself in the form of physical violence and social discrimination. The apathy, impunity and partisanship of the administration at various levels has compounded the human tragedy, and the gravity of the violation of Constitutional guarantees of Freedom of Expression, Freedom of Association and Movement, and most important, the Freedom of Religion and Belief.

The current wave of incidents against Christians first came into light in May 2014 when Christian families were denied ration and ration cards after they refused to bow down to the demands set by the Vishwa Hindu Parishad (VHP). The VHP had asked each Christian family to contribute 200 rupees per member towards Hindu festivities initiated by the VHP in Sirisguda village. The Christians who had always contributed money during village festivals by their free will could not comply as the money demanded was too much, and the Christians are poor. This resulted in their being denied food for more than 2 months. The village leadership kept silent. When Christians reported this matter to the district authorities, activists of the VHP and the Bajrang Dal, which is also very active in the region, beat them up. The Gram Sabha, the village council, of Sirisguda passed a resolution outlawing non-Hindus from the village. A section of the Panchayat Raj Act (129 G) was used to adopt a resolution proscribing all religious activity in the village areas which did not adhere to the Hindu faith. Even the Collector of the District, Mr. Ankit Anand, who is the highest civil servant and administration of the region, admitted was against the law.

Since then, according to media reports, more than 60 villages have passed similar resolutions in the area. There have been frequent reports between July 2014 and now of Christians being beaten up in Bastar District in various places including Sirisguda, Belar, Gadiya, Parapur etc.
Hindu-Muslim relations within India (and here the conveniently timed ratcheting up of tensions and cross-border firing is proving very useful). The most prominent method deployed in recent weeks has been the issue of “Love Jihad”.

Eminent jurist Mr. Fali Nariman, a former Member of the Rajya Sabha and a Member of the National Integration Council traditionally chaired by the Prime Minister of India, expressed concern at the government’s “silence” on the hate speeches witnessed in parts of India and rued that Hinduism was “changing its benign face”. Traditionally Hinduism has been the most tolerant of all Indian faiths. But - recurrent instances of religious tension fanned by fanaticism and hate-speech has shown that the

“‘What we are witnessing is not just Hindu rituals in the public sphere but their use to create a predominantly Hindutva public sphere that marginalises others. Rituals are mere instruments.’”

Mr. Bharat Bhushan, Noted editor

prehension is that Hinduism is somehow changing its benign face because, and only because it is believed and proudly proclaimed by a few (and not contradicted by those at the top): that it is because of their faith and belief that HINDUS have been now put in the driving seat of governance. Nariman praised Jawaharlal Nehru, saying he “never looked upon the diverse and varied peoples of India from the standpoint of Hinduism”. While dealing with minority rights, Indian courts had once conceptualised their role as that of an Opposition political party — until the BJP in the early 1990s characterised Congress policy as “appeasement of the minorities”. The label stuck; “minority” became an unpopular word. We have been hearing on television and reading in newspapers almost daily a tirade by one or more individuals or groups against one or another section of citizens (from) a religious minority. The criticism has been that the majority government at the Centre has done nothing to stop this tirade. I agree,“ he said delivering the annual lecture organised by the National Commission for Minorities at the Constitution Club. It was titled “Minorities at crossroads: comments on judicial pronouncements”. Mr. Nariman urged the commission to move court by invoking the Indian Penal Code and the Criminal Procedure Code against those making hate speeches and publicise the action to win the confidence of the minorities.

His words did move the National Commission for Minorities. The NCM, in a resolution posted on its website, said: “The Commission would appreciate a public statement from the Government to reassure all minorities that their constitutional rights of safety, security and equality before the law cannot be compromised at any cost. The Government needs to send a clear signal that it is committed to the protection and security of all citizens and that no attempt at creating an atmosphere of fear and mistrust will be tolerated.” Without naming hate speeches of some politicians of the ruling BJP such as Yogi Adityanath and Dr. Praveen Togadia against Muslims for so-called ‘Love Jihad’ campaign, the resolution said “The NCM also condemns the communally charged statements attributed to prominent people in public life which are creating this atmosphere of mistrust and heightened tension. These happenings are violating the principles of the Indian Constitution and also the call given by the Hon’ble Prime Minister that there should be a moratorium on communal riot.”

An editorial in the Indian Express asks, “So who is in charge in the BJP? And why is no action being taken against those like Adityanath and Thakur who are openly stoking communal tensions on the ground, especially in poll-bound states, in flagrant defiance of the forward-looking and development-oriented image courted by the Modi-led BJP at the Centre? Or is the party playing true to its own worst stereotype — of always speaking in two voices, carefully choreographing the interplay between them and their alternation?”

The BJP is unabashed about its links with the Sangh Parivar. Mr. Modi is himself a former RSS leader, as are several of his Cabinet colleagues. Some ranking RSS officials have in recent weeks been inducted as general secretaries of the BJP, leaving absolutely no one in any doubt of the seamless fusion of the political party and the Sangh which styles itself as a social and cultural organisations.

Mr. Seshadri Chari, former editor of RSS mouthpiece Organiser and member of the BJP national executive, who enjoys a deserved reputation as a sober and reflective commentator, is quoted in the Outlook Magazine saying says that Hindus have always been a majority in India but the manifestation of majoritarianism has been reflected in the cultural and social field. “Now it is reflected in the politics of the country. A large number of foot-soldiers in the RSS-BJP do believe that the political Hindu has arrived.”

THE HATE CAMPAIGN: RSS chief Mr. Mohan Bhagwat has repeatedly asserted that everyone in India is Hindu, including Muslims and Christians, because this is the land of the Hindu people and civilisation. This refrain was picked up by the Deputy Chief Minister of Goa, and by big and small leaders across the country, going viral on social media and the national TV News channels in their English and Hindi debates. The Sangh ideologue MG Vaidya said on 19th May, three days after the election results, that they can now tackle issues such as the building of the Ram temple on the site of the Babri mosque they demolished in 1992 Vishwa Hindu Parishad leader Mr. Ashok Singhal, said “if [Muslims] keep opposing Hindus, how long can they survive?”. Another leader said “Modi will restore Hindutva rule, like Prithviraj Chauhan (25th May 2014). The focus is now on Love Jihad. [See Annexure for details and Links.]

GHAR WAPSI : The political and coercive conversion to Hinduism:

Christians constitute 2.3 per cent of the national population, according to the 2011 census. They have been a focal target of the Sangh Parivar for a long time. In August 2014, 72 Valmikis (a section of the Dalit community) who had in the past converted to Christianity underwent a so-called “re-conversion” to Hinduism in Aligarh in the state of Uttar Pradesh, under the auspices of the ‘Dharma Jagran Vivad’ (Religious Awakening Forum). This was a “Ghar Vapasi” (literally, a “return home”) ceremony through which the Sangh Parivar intervenes to claim non-Hindu members of the Dalit and Adivasi communities as Hindus. The Constitution of India guarantees freedom of religion, allowing for the free exercise of individual choice over matters of faith. However, “Freedom of Religion” laws enacted in several states presume that individuals are incapable of making their own informed decisions regarding matters of faith, and can only be manipulated or coerced into conversion. The language of the Gujarat anti-conversion law enacted in 2003 is telling in this respect. Conversion is viewed as an attempt “to make one person to renounce one religion and adopt another religion.” These laws empower district administrations to oversee and regulate religious conversions, in order to prevent what are referred to as conversions by “fraud” or “force.” Effectively, these laws target Christian and Muslim communities and provide opportunities for both local officials and Hindu supremacist organizations to harass and intimidate them.

The anti-conversion laws, passed by a number of states, do not apply to such ‘Ghar Vapasi’ ceremonies. The Sangh Parivar has a singular focus on curbing any conversions out of Hinduism, particularly by Dalits and Adivasis. In April 2013 BJP leader Venkiah Naidu, now a Cabinet minister, had publicly announced his party’s intention to “bring an anti-conversion law to ban religious conversions in the country if it is voted to power in 2014 General Elections.” Highlighting the primary motivation underlying his party’s anxiety over conversions, he went on to add: “...The country will be safe and sound only when Hindus are in a majority.”

Inspired by the party’s rise to power, several Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP) leaders have launched so-called “re-conversion” drives targeting Christian communities. RSS Hindu activist, Rajeshwar Singh recently declared while converting a Christian family to Hinduism in Hasayan (140 km south of Delhi in the state of Uttar Pradesh), “We will cleanse our Hindu society. We will not let the conspiracy of church or mosque succeed in Bharat (India).” Rumors continue to circulate suggesting Christians were forcibly converted and the church has also been refashioned into a Shiva temple. These conversion efforts are directed primarily at Adivasis and Dalits, informed by a caste politics that drives Hindutva anxieties over conversion. The basic claim that all Christians, like Muslims, are converts, empowers Hindutva groups to deny the religious legitimacy of Adivasi and Dalit Christians. Moreover the claim that conversion to Hinduism is merely “re-conversion” rests on the fallacious notion that all Adivasis are “Hindu” by default, denying the legitimacy of their own distinct and autonomous religious traditions. In BJP-ruled states like Chhattisgarh, draconian laws specifically target Christians, as in the recent case of the Bilaspur High Court banning “all non-Hindu religious propaganda, prayers and speeches in the villages” in Bastar district. The message is clearly that the only religious identity permissible is Hinduism. The administration has remained silent on the growing atmosphere of repression threatening Christians in India.

On May 18, 2014 in Kundapur, Karnataka, the properties of two churches were damaged by unidentified miscreants. An ornamental pot at the entrance of the Holy Rosary church were (was) broken and a signpost leading to St. Antony Church in Koteshwar also was uprooted. On June 24, 2014 in Bhilai, Durg, suspected Hindu extremists demolished an independent church. According to local sources, the church was completely destroyed. Rumors were spread among the villagers claiming that the building was destroyed by a cyclone. The area Christians, however, maintained that it was the hands of the extremists as only the church was damaged in the area by the so called ‘cyclone’. Such attacks are pre planned and pre-meditated to cause maximum damage to property, resources, vehicles, and cause damages that are very hard to rebuild.
Social Exclusion

52 families were denied ration for two months in the Sirisguda Village which was an order enforced by the panchayat head. They approached the food inspector of the district and asked for an enquiry to be conducted. On Monday, June 16, 2014, when the two representatives were sent to appease the village leaders and the complainants, both of them were chased away from the village. Then some assailants filed a false complaint at the Badanj Police Station, Lakandi Taluk - District Bastar about the Christians beating the Hindus in the village. This was simultaneously followed up by a mob of 200 perpetrators who attacked Christian families. Most families were stoned and chased away with sticks, while 8 men and 2 women were seriously injured and hospitalized. This incident preceded the banning of non-Hindu missionaries in Bastar, as mentioned above (Sec. II, Increasing Intolerance against Christians).

Social exclusions are the one of the primary tactics to victimize minorities denying basic human rights that are common to every citizen. These exclusion orders, often make Christians vulnerable to excessive violence and denial of social privileges like access to water, electricity and work.

On July 28, 2014 a mob of over 300 persons from the Yadav community led by Swami Krishnadavananda threatened the Pastor and 30 families who were believers in the Church at Galagati, Holalkara in the Chitradurga District to convert back to Hinduism. They along with the local Panchayat issued a one week deadline to decide on the same, which otherwise, would lead to the families being ostracized from the local village. Such exclusions force families into submission or are attacked for making a choice of being as a Christian.

Assaults on Church Leaders and Believers

Assaults on Church leaders and believers have augmented bizarrely. Profiling of Christians in villages and attacking them has been the most effective way of spreading terror among the minorities. A Christian along with his wife, mother-in-law and mother were beaten by Hindu fanatics at Parapur Village in Bastar, Chhattisgarh on July 26, 2014. The incident occurred when five Hindu fanatics took Shri Raguram (name changed) outside his house and started verbally abusing him. They alleged that that he had left their Gods and became a Christian to which he replied saying that he had become a Christian because he wanted to and no one had forced him to do so. On hearing this, they started slapping and kicking him. Then when they began to strangle him with the intention of killing, his mother and mother-in-law interfered and stopped the men from trying to kill him. They then slapped and beat the elderly women and his wife. He was bleeding profusely and was later admitted to the Jagdalpur hospital. When Shri Raguram’s wife went to the Lohandiguda Police Station to file a complaint, the police refrained from doing so, citing it as a family feud.

In another incident, a mob of about 10 people came and attacked a Pastor and believers in Perur, near Coimbatore while praying for a 8 year old who had a fractured her hand, on Sunday, August 3, 2014 at 7:00pm. Six men among the mob stormed into the house and beat up the pastor and the family, including women and children with vessels. According to the local police, the pastor was allegedly beaten up with sticks and dragged outside the house. He was then stripped and publicly humiliated by the gang. The FIR was filed in Perur Police station and the two men were arrested and remanded to judicial custody by the magistrate of Coimbatore Court.

Two preachers from the Jehovah Witness were arrested on allegations of conversion on August 17, 2014 at Sukhiya, Indore, which was also the day of the Hindu festival Janmashtami. They were taken to the Harsh Nagar Police Station where a (an) FIR was filed and they were charged under the MP Freedom of Religion Act, 1968 under Sec. 3 and 4. A mob of over 400 people had gathered outside the police station chanting slogans against the pastor. They were bailed out by Christian workers next day morning. Most of these incidents are not reported to the police due to fear and intimidation from the local thugs that operate for the RSS, VHP and the Bajrang Dal. Such attacks are unconstitutional and against the fundamental right to freedom on religion.

Police partiality and Inaction

However, the violence in itself fails to reveal the full picture. The impunity enjoyed by the violent mobs is a bigger cause for concern. Many victims of violence complain about the lack of police action, including hostility towards Christians. Police resist filing criminal complaints and have on several instances allegedly threatened to falsely incriminate the victims in some cases.

On September 6, 2014, twelve pastors were beaten at a Police station in Greater Noida on the pretext of a mob of about 150 Hindu fundamentalists that had gathered outside and demanded such action. The police obliged and thrashed the pastors. No reports were filed. It was baffling to know that the police had thrashed the pastors. Such police atrocities have led to increase of impunity among perpetrators.

On June 30, 2014, the police manhandled a Pastor, filed a case against him and summoned him to appear before the court in Gandhi Nagar, Bhopal, Madhya Pradesh, India. It was reported that the local Hindu extremists had opposed the ministry of the Pastor and threatened to harm him several times in the past for conducting prayer meetings. However, the pastor continued to conduct worship services and later started to build a prayer hall on his land. Subsequently, the extremists filed a police complaint against the pastor of illegal construction. Earlier, on 19 April, 2014, the police had questioned the same Pastor at his home, slapped him and told him to stop the construction work and had charged him Under Sections 107 and 116 of the Indian Penal Code.
GOVERNMENT RESTRICTIONS ON FREEDOM OF RELIGION

Inspite of constitutional guarantees and international commitments, there are several hostile and discriminatory laws and policies which serve to restrict the rights of individual and religious communities both at a national and state level.

The Constitution of India safeguards the freedom of conscience and the right to profess, practise and propagate the religion of one’s choice under Article 25. Article 19(1)(a) of the Indian Constitution states that all citizens shall have the right to the freedom of speech and expression; Article 19(1)(b) and (c) gives every citizen the right to assemble peaceably and without arms and form associations and unions.

India is also signatory to the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenants on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights where the freedom of religion or belief is recognised as a basic inalienable human right.

Yet, inspite of these constitutional guarantees and international commitments, there are several hostile and discriminatory laws and policies which serve to restrict the rights of individual and religious communities both at a national and state level.

The details of some key orders and legal provisions are outlined below:

1950 Presidential Order
Para 3 of the Constitution (Scheduled Castes) Order 1950, states that: “No person who professes a religion different from the Hindu, the Sikh and the Buddhist religion shall be deemed to be a member of a Schedule Caste [from the Dalit community].”

Para 3 is violative of fundamental rights safeguarded in the Constitution of India as the entire premise for denying benefits and extending reservations in government jobs and educational institutions to members of the Schedule Caste origin is their religious affiliations. Furthermore, it gravely restricts the freedom of conscience of members of the Scheduled Caste community by limiting the benefits and protections available to them provided they continue to practise the Hindu, Sikh or Buddhist religion.

Approximately 70% of the Christian population in India is from the Scheduled Caste backgrounds and is economically poor and engaged in menial occupations. In spite of their conversion to Christianity, they continue to suffer the same disadvantages and disabilities arising out of the traditional practice of untouchability.

The Government of India set up several commissions to investigate the conditions of socially, economically and educationally backward classes in India, which have repeatedly recognised that Dalit Christians continue to face oppressive and hostile situations due to their caste.

The Mandal Commission in its report noted that: “There is no doubt that social and educational backwardness among non-Hindu communities is more or less of the same order as among Hindu communities. Though caste system is peculiar to Hindu society yet, in actual practice, it also pervades the non-Hindu communities in India in varying degrees. There are two main reasons for this phenomenon: first, caste system is a great conditioner of the mind and leaves an indelible mark on the person’s social consciousness and cultural mores. Consequently, even after conversion, the ex-Hindus carried with them their deeply ingrained ideas of social hierarchy and stratification. This resulted in the Hindu converts inadvertently acting as Trojan horses of caste system among highly equalitarian religions such as Islam, Christianity, Sikhism, etc. Secondly, non-Hindu minorities living in pre-dominantly Hindu India could not escape from its dominant social and cultural influences. Thus, both from within and without, caste amongst non-Hindu communities received continuous sustenance and stimulus…”

The High Power Panel on Minorities, SCs, STs and other weaker sections noted that: “The Christians and the Neo-Buddhist need the same kind of concessions for their converts from the scheduled castes as are offered to Hindu and Sikhs. And their plea, we have recommended, should be fulfilled with utmost sympathy. They too suffer from the same economic handicaps and social neglect and isolation as the Hindu Scheduled Castes, as is amply illustrated by us in our report elsewhere.”

Similarly the Justice Ranganath Mishra Commission in 2007 recommended that: “Para 3 of the Constitution (Scheduled Castes) Order 1950 – which originally restricted the Scheduled Caste only to Hindus and later opened it to Sikhs and Buddhists, thus still excluding from its purview the Muslims, Christians, Jains and Parsis, etc. – should be wholly deleted by appropriate action so as to completely de-link Scheduled Caste status from religion and make the Scheduled Castes net fully religion-neutral like that of the Scheduled Tribes.”

In spite of the recommendations of several commission both nationally and internationally, the Government of India has failed to move for amendments to Para 3 of the Constitution (Scheduled Castes) Order 1950 making it religion neutral. Furthermore, the Government of India has failed to file any reply in a case pending before the Supreme Court of India challenging the constitutionality of the Para 3 of the Constitution (Scheduled Castes) Order 1950.

The case has been pending since 2004.

Freedom of Religion Acts
Several states of India have enacted laws titled “Freedom of Religion Acts,” or anti-conversion laws, as they are more commonly known. These laws, enacted in six states require the person converting to give details of his or her conversion to the district magistrate, either prior to the conversion “ceremony” or subsequent to it. The law in Gujarat requires that the person seeking to convert to another religion must take prior permission from the district magistrate before any conversion “ceremony” is performed. The laws penalise any failure to report a religious conversion with jail terms up to one year and fines. The laws also penalise “conversion by force, fraud and inducement” or allurement with jail terms up to five years and fines up to Rs. 100,000.

The Acts cast an onerous burden on the converted person and the persons seeking to propagate their faith, without providing the required checks and balances to ensure protection against their misuse. They are a violation of the right to freedom of association, the right to privacy and the freedom of conscience. The laws undermine the agency of the convert and make every religious conversion suspect and liable for scrutiny.

Repeatedly, these laws have been used to target and harass religious minorities. It has been noted that Hindu extremists frequently invoked the anti-conversion law as a means of inciting mobs against Christians or having them arrested without evidence. These laws have both drawn considerable adverse international attention. In September 2012, the High Court of Himachal Pradesh struck down Section 4 of the Himachal Pradesh Freedom of Religion Act, which made it obligatory for a person to give a 30-day prior notice to the district magistrate about his or her intention to convert. The Court held that the procedure is oppressive and struck it down as violative of the Indian constitution. However, similar provisions remain in the other state laws.

Recent reports highlight that nine Muslims were arrested and charged under the freedom of Religion Act, for allegedly converting Dalits to Islam. The Dalits who had converted were reconverted and subsequently arrested for not providing the details of their conversion to Islam to the district authorities.

According to reports in 2014 there were six instances when Christians were allegedly accused and arrested under the Freedom of Religion acts in Chhattisgarh and Madhya Pradesh. The cases are ongoing.

The re-conversion debate

Re-conversion was the flavour of the Christmas season in India this year. The season of advent never saw a day when the media did not carry the news of some re-conversion ceremony happening in India with reports of ‘x’ number of Christians or Muslims converting to Hinduism.

The re-conversion drive is not new although the issue came to national notice after an alleged re-conversion event in Agra organized by the Dharma Jagran Samanvay Samiti (DJSS) where in 200 Muslims from at least 57 families were claimed to have been converted to Hinduism by the DJSS.

One of the alleged converts later told television news channels that ration cards, BPL (below poverty line) cards and Adhar were promised by the organizers of the event. “We were told we will get ration card, Aadhar card, the police will not bother us. We are poor so what do we do?” he told the media.

The Agra event was followed by pronouncements from the DJSS and other groups of a planned re-conversion event in Aligarh where in they intended to convert 4000 Christians and 1000 Muslim families on Christmas day.

On December 18, the national minorities day, Rajeeshwar Singh, the head of DJSS told the national media that his organization will make sure that Indian is cleansed of Christianity and Islam by 2021. Mr. Singh had earlier made news when on December 12; the media reported his appeal to fund the “costly” conversion movement to Hinduism in Uttar Pradesh. Undated letters and posters addressed by him sought a donation of Rupees 5 lakh for converting a Muslim and Rupees 2 lakh for the “ghar vapsi” of a Christian.

The noise of re-conversions, this advent, was also accompanied by pronouncements from various allies of the ruling government. Mr. Mohan Bhagwat of the RSS defended the re-conversion process and designated India a Hindu Rashtra (Nation). Mr. Togadia of the VHP went further and claimed, “At a point of time, the entire world was Hindu.” Sushma Swaraj, the current Minister for External Affairs also contributed to the controversy by demanding that the “Bhagwat Geeta” be made the national book of India. On December 1, the Union Minister Sadhvi Niranjan Jyoti made communal remarks and used expletives in an election rally in New Delhi. BJP leader Sakshi Maharaj from Unnao, Uttar Pradesh also came under fire when he called Nathuram Godse, the killer of Mahatma Gandhi, a patriot.

When the opposition cornered the Government in the Rajya Sabha during the winter session of the Parliament and demanded that the Prime Minister give a statement on the recent happenings, the government came out with a proposal of a nation wide anti-conversion law. This demand of the government is widely supported by various allies of the BJP and offshoots of the RSS and VHP. The council of ministers of the BJP including Parliamentary Affairs minister Venkaiah Naidu and External Affairs minister Sushma Swaraj have also come out strongly in support of such a move.

The groups that conduct the ceremony call it homecoming, or “Ghar Wapsi” and differentiate between conversion and re-conversions.

The Christmas season also saw the government calling the nation to observe Governance day in the honour of the Ex-Prime Minister Mr. Atal Bihari Vajpayee on his birthday, December 25, which is also Christmas day. Schools and Universities were given notices to remain open, several government departments remained open despite contrary statements from the government, and there were massive debates on TV channels on the intention of the government and its attempt to sideline Christmas.

The country seems to be bombarded daily with communal statements coming from leaders of the RSS, BJP, VHP and their allies as they inch closer to the goal of Hindu Rashtra (Nation), one statement, one controversy at a time. Through these tactics, the camel’s nose has been pushed into the tent; the body may soon follow.

The other example that demonstrates the point is the story of the boiling frog, a widespread anecdote that describes a frog being boiled alive, slowly. The idea is that if a frog is placed in boiling water, it will jump out, but if it is placed in cold water that is slowly heated, it will not perceive the danger and will be cooked to death. The story is often used as a metaphor for the inability or unwillingness of people to react to significant changes that occur gradually. In the same way the Hindu Rashtra is slowly being pushed into the consciousness of the nation for decades, and the present issues are just an indication that the water is now uncomfortably hot.

Understanding the rationale of re-conversions

But, turning our focus back to re-conversions, we must ask, what is re-conversion? What is the rationale behind it? How long has it been going on? And how is it flawed, if it is?

The idea of re-conversion is old. Dr. Koenraad Elst, Hindutva’s self proclaimed advocate, writes in his book The Demographic Siege, that Hindutva activists from Dayananda Saraswati in the past, to Abhas Chatterjee presently advocate that Hindus must challenge alien ideologies (meaning Islam and Christianity). He quotes Chatterjee’s words: “We consider these alien ideologies to be enemies of our nation. The goal is to bring our minorities back into our nation after destroying the deadly intoxication of these ideologies.”

Hindutva’s idea of a Hindu nation, rests on Savarkar’s claims of Jati, a term he used for race, claiming that Hindus are not only a nation but a Jati (race), determined by a common origin and possessing common blood. He said that beyond the Hindu community's differences of castes or sects there was an invisible bond of common blood, which could back trace to the Aryans. “We are intrinsically one,” he said, “transcending all superficial barriers of distance, creed, or sect.” So there were four Varnas (Castes) but one Jati (Race). According to Savarkar, the nation also had a ‘national soul’ that he called Chitt. “The Chitt determines the direction in which the nation is to advance culturally.”

This nation, jati or race was held together not by biological factors but by the caste system, which though based on the hierarchy of ritual purity was assimilative and integrative so that every alien group could find a place in it – at a subordinate rank below Brahmans.

Hindutva also advocates the principle of an underlying ‘Hindu essence’ that remains unaffected by conversions to alien faiths like Islam and Christianity. This notion is central to Hindutva’s ideology of re-conversion of Muslims and Christians to its brand of Hinduism.

Savarkar argued that Muslims and Christians could redeem themselves by choosing to reject their conversion and returning to Hinduism. Golwalkar reaffirmed his thought and called it, “our duty to call these our forlorn brothers suffering under religious slavery for centuries, back to their ancestral home.” He said, “In the course of time they will realize that they too were once Hindus, that it is their duty to be loyal to this land.”

Hindutva demands full and enforced assimilation into this ‘national race’ through religious conversion and cultural integration or advocates for permanent exclusion or subjugation of the ‘other’ (Muslims and Christians).

Golwalkar explains this, “Muslims and Christians here should give up their present foreign mental complexion and merge in the common stream of our national life.”

If Muslims and Christians chose to remain as aliens, he warned, they could only occupy a position of inferiority – ‘wholly subordinated to the Hindu nation, claiming nothing, deserving no privileges, far less any preferential treatment – not even citizen’s rights.’

The process of Re-conversion

Building up on the strong opposition of Hindu leaders like Vivekananda and Mahatma Gandhi, to proselytization by Christian missionaries, the Sangh Parivar not only added a militant dimension to this critique but also launched the process of re-conversions encouraged by many influential leaders like Pandit Madan Mohan Malviya, who has just been awarded the Bharat Ratna by the present government.

Malviya who set up the Benares Hindu University, was instrumental in the coming together of Hindu Mahasabha and Arya Samaj in 1923 to make common cause on issues like cow slayter and reconversion.

“On one hand, Muslims and Christians are committed to bringing others into their religion, on the other, you aren’t bringing back even those who want to return,” he said in his speech at the 1923 session of the Mahasabha at Varanasi. “Lakhs became Christians... Many untouchables became Christians. There is so much oppression. Hindu numbers are depleting. If Hindus cease to exist, who will protect the sacred thread (janeu), religion, Vedas, Puranas, cows and Brahmins?”

Hindu organizations developed several rites of re-conversion, calling them purification or welcoming rites. The Vishwa Hindu Parishad (VHP) and other Hindutva organizations have deployed these rites aggressively throughout the 1980s and 1990s to counter the perceived tide of conversions to Christianity and Islam. They not only directly convert non-Hindus but also ‘integrate’ and ‘Hinduize’ the marginalized caste groups and Tribals in India.

Late Dilip Singh Judeo, Late Swami Laxmanananda Saraswati, Swami Aseemanand, Khum Singh Maharaj and L Khimun, are among the many activists who claimed large number of converts as a result of their work in tribal areas of India. Tribals, who are originally animists, have been targeted in a major way by Hindutva organizations, who are working overtime on assimilating tribal groups into their brand of Hinduism while inciting them against Christian missionaries and the Church who have been present in the tribal areas since the 19th Century.

The Sangh Parivar has targeted Tribals not only in the central, east and north west of India but also in the North-East India in a major way especially in the states of Arunachal Pradesh, Assam, Tripura and Manipur. Syncretizing local religions to counter the Christian presence is a formula that works there like in the rest of India. The re-conversion ceremonies differ from place to place according to the acceptable context. So while in Chhattisgarh the late Mr. Judeo used to wash the feet of the re-converted person with holy water and declare the person Hindu again, in Jharkhand Mr. Tirkey of the Central Sarna Committee, makes the converted person taste a drop of blood of a freshly sacrificed rooster, besides washing their feet, and sprinkling water on them.

Huge numbers of converts are usually claimed by Hindu groups for e.g. Rajeshwar Singh of the DJSS claims that the DJSS has converted over 5 Lakh people to Hinduism in Uttar Pradesh alone and Radheshyam of the DJSS in Chhattisgarh lays claim to more than 57000 families that his group had allegedly made Hindus during their campaigns since the BJP government led by Raman Singh came to power in the state since 2003. However a close investigation reveals that these numbers may not be trusted and may be part of a well oiled propaganda and funding machine.

According to Dr. John Dayal, member of the National Integration Council, what Hindu extremists call “reconversion” is in most instances “a case of mere conversion at best, and forcible or coercive conversion at worst."

Funding and organization of re-conversions

The DJSS and its associates raise funds locally and internationally. The association between the DJSS and the United States-based International Development Relief Fund (IDRF) is well recorded, especially in relation to its activities in Bihar and Jharkhand. News magazine Frontline reported in its January 2015 issue, that ‘new funding avenues have been opened through organisations such as the Hindu Unity Front, which has units in the U.S., the United Kingdom and other parts of Europe. Organisations such as the Overseas Friends of the BJP and the VHP’s international units also support the DJSS. This funding has become more intensive after the formation of the Modi government.’

At the field level, the DJSS works closely with Sangh Parivar affiliates such as the Vanvasi Kalyan Ashram, the Ekal Vidyalaya, the Sewa Bharati, the Vivekananda Kendra, the Bharat Kalyan Parishad and the Friends of Tribal Society, some of which have been found responsible for the forced conversions of tribal Christians in Odisha and Madhya Pradesh. Re-conversion ceremonies are often attended and endorsed by BJP legislators. For e.g. in Chhattisgarh, BJP MP Dinesh Kashyap regularly attends re-conversion ceremonies organized by the DJSS and in Uttar Pradesh, Yogi Adityanath, the outspoken BJP MP openly endorses re-conversion activities.

Conversion, re-conversion and the law

Hindutva groups often accuse the Muslim and particularly the Christian minority of practicing forced and fraudulent conversions. In 1998, Prime Minister Atal Bihari Vajpayee called for a "national debate on conversions" in light of Christian missionary work in tribal communities, and this call was punctuated—not coincidentally, in the view of some observers—by the brutal murder of the Australian missionary Graham Staines and his two young sons in January 1999 in a tribal region of Orissa.

Several states in India, since the late 1960s, have enacted “Freedom of Religion Acts” commonly known as Anti-conversion laws in order to check conversions by force or fraud. These laws are used selectively against minorities in these states to harass the clergy and the community for years together.

However the Sangh Parivar believes that re-conversions do not attract the provisions of these acts. They describe re-conversions as "home coming" and not a change of religion, since the Hindu essence, mentioned earlier in the article, remains intact in a Christian or a Muslim. And so they propose the law to be selective—i.e. stop other religious conversions while continuing to sanction re-conversions to Hinduism.

The present government and its allies have responded to the forcible conversions of Christians and Muslims into Hinduism in a predictable manner. Venkaiah Naidu, the parliamentary affairs minister, promised an anti-conversion law, while campaigning for general elections earlier this year. He had said in Vishakhapatnam, “BJP is totally opposed to conversions and the country would only be safe when Hindus are in a majority.”

True to his word, as soon as the opposition targeted the government over the Agra re-conversion controversy, Mr. Naidu presented the government’s intent of an anti-conversion law for the entire nation. So the current BJP government demonstrates a keen interest in enacting an all-India anti-conversion law, in spite some of its ministers showing open and vociferous support for ‘re-conversions’.

It is about fundamental freedoms

Indian’s have to realize that the debate on conversions, re-conversions and anti-conversion laws is essentially a debate over fundamental freedoms as enshrined in the constitution of India. It is not only about a community or a religion but the right of citizens.

The Constituent Assembly after much deliberation and also protest from Sangh Parivar elements had cleared the Article 25 (1) which states that “all persons are equally entitled to freedom of conscience and the right to freely profess, practise and propagate religion” subject to “public order, morality and health”.

Praful Bidwai in his article on the re-conversion offensive, remarks, “The rights to the freedom of conscience and to practise and propagate one’s religion derive from fundamental considerations of citizenship embedded in a charter of democracy. They must be decoupled from people’s religious-ethnic-linguistic identities, and also from the premise that all religions equally capture the divine truth or spiritual essence. The state must remain firmly agnostic on this and not assign equal or dissimilar values to different religions. Religion is a deeply personal, intimate matter. In a free liberal-democratic society, the state cannot be allowed to dictate or interfere with it—so long as it doesn’t infringe on other citizens’ rights.”

Hindutva groups have issued strong statements in support of a nation-wide anti-conversion law, at the same time supporting re-conversions and mainstreaming it. The government of the day prescribes the anti-conversion law and by extension the suspension of the freedom of conscience, as the price of reigning in elements who are involved in this dubious re-conversion process.

Bidwai calls it “doubly offensive”. He says, “it reveals something important. Behind the campaign isn’t a lunatic fringe of extremists over which the Parivar has lost control. It’s the BJP itself.”

The greater threat

But the concern of the community and the nation should not be merely limited to the issues of physical violence, hate campaigns, anti-conversion law and reconversions. The threat to fundamental freedoms and indeed democracy is greater than just the issue of re-conversions or hate speech so prevalent in political discourse today.

The most dangerous threat seems to be to the Indian Constitution, or at least to those sections of it that are seen as a hin-
Dr. John Dayal says, “The Constitution has sustained itself now for six and a half decades, but it remains a fragile document. The Supreme Court has repeatedly affirmed that its basic features cannot be altered. But it permits amendments to bring it in tune with the times, and to cater to new situations. Constitutional provisions for sort of suspending fundamental rights by declaring a state of National Emergency have been used in times of the wars with China and Pakistan, especially in 1971. But Mrs. Indira Gandhi in 1975 showed that the Constitution could be suspended, so to say, even for political, partisan and personal reasons. After her election was upturned by the Allahabad high court for using government machinery in her campaign, she declared a state of Emergency in June that year saying there was national anarchy and peoples groups were trying to overthrow the government. Till she revoked it and called for general elections in 1977, the Emergency saw the country ruled by extraconstitutional centres of authority.

When it first came to national power in 1998, the BIP-led government set up a high-level commission to review the Constitution headed by the former Chief Justice MN Venkatachaliah. He refused to alter the basic structure of the Constitution except for calling for electoral reforms as a matter of urgency. Mr. Vajpayee never had the numbers at that time but Mr. Modi does.

So while Muslims and Christians feel that they are being encircled in a vicious and tightening noose, in the villages and small towns by Sangh cadres who seem to have the police on their side, and nationally by the Federal and State governments who seem to endorse the hate campaigns and the violence; the Civil society must also be at guard and speak up regarding the threat to the Constitution of India which has evolved as a great international democratic document that protects the subcontinent-sized country’s hundreds of cultures, languages, races and faith.

Without a State of Emergency being declared, the Extra-constitutional Centres of authority seem to be active. This is something that must worry not just Indian religious minorities, but the world.

Reid B. Locklin, Up, Over, Through: Rethinking ‘Conversion’ as a Category of Hindu-Christian Studies

CHHATTISGARH

- On 19th January, in Navmuda, Gariyaband, Hindu fundamentalists barged into the Sunday worship meeting of Prarthana Bhavan Church, accused the Christians of forceful conversions, verbally abused them, tore Bibles, desecrated the altar, spat on the drinking water and food and forced the Christians to worship two Hindu women who were part of the fundamentalist group and who claimed to be possessed by goddess Durga.

- On 20th January in Indagoan, Gariyaband, Hindu fundamentalists accused Pastor Bhaiyalal Markam from Prarthana Bhavan Church of forceful conversion and threatened to kill him as he was returning home after conducting a prayer meeting. The pastor relocated for safety measures for about a week.

- On 25th February in Lalkhadan, Torwa, Bilaspur, Hindu fundamentalists along with police disrupted a prayer meeting and accused the Assistant Pastor Rajkaran Ratre and about 20 women who were praying there of forceful conversion. The police took the Christians to the police station for questioning and later released them without filing any charges against them.
