Introduction

1. The Working Group on the Universal Periodic Review, established in accordance with Human Rights Council resolution 5/1 of 18 June 2007, held its twenty-first session from 19 to 30 January 2015. The review of Kenya was held at the 7th meeting, on 22 January 2015. The delegation of Kenya was headed by Githu Muigai, Attorney General of the Republic. At its 14th meeting, held on 27 January 2015, the Working Group adopted the report on Kenya.

2. On 13 January 2015, the Human Rights Council selected the following group of rapporteurs (troika) to facilitate the review of Kenya: China, Germany and Namibia.

3. In accordance with paragraph 15 of the annex to resolution 5/1 and paragraph 5 of the annex to resolution 16/21, the following documents were issued for the review of Kenya:

(a) A national report submitted/written presentation prepared in accordance with paragraph 15 (a) (A/HRC/WG.6/21/KEN/1);

(b) A compilation prepared by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) in accordance with paragraph 15 (b) (A/HRC/WG.6/21/KEN/2);

(c) A summary prepared by OHCHR in accordance with paragraph 15 (c) (A/HRC/WG.6/21/KEN/3).

4. A list of questions prepared in advance by Belgium, the Czech Republic, Germany, the Netherlands, Norway, Slovenia, Spain, Switzerland, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the United States of America was transmitted to Kenya through the troika. These questions are available on the extranet of the universal periodic review (UPR).

I. Summary of the proceedings of the review process

A. Presentation by the State under review

5. The delegation of Kenya, headed by Githu Muigai, Attorney General of the Republic, affirmed the commitment of Kenya to the UPR mechanism. The second review was particularly important because it provided an opportunity for States to account for the promises made during the first review. Kenya underlined the implementation of a number of the recommendations made in the first UPR review and that others were in the process of being implemented through policy development initiatives and programmatic interventions.

6. Kenya stated that, since the previous UPR review, it had promulgated a new and robust Constitution. The country has been in a period of constitutional and political transition, implementing the various aspects of the new Constitution through direct constitutional actions, mandatory legislative interventions, requisite policy development and institutional reforms. Despite those achievements, a number of challenges, such as poverty, corruption, terrorism and disease, continued to threaten the progress made by the Government.

7. Kenya emphasized that the holding of peaceful elections in March 2013 should be underscored, given that the previous elections had been fraught with violence and had almost tipped Kenya into an abyss of chaos. The elections were adjudged by many international observers to be free, fair and credible. The holding of peaceful election bore testimony to the many reforms undertaken by the Government.

8. The preparation of the national report followed an all-inclusive and participatory process that brought together government agencies, national human rights institutions, civil society organizations and OHCHR.

9. Kenya stated that, during the review in 2010, it had accepted 149 recommendations out of the 150 given. On the basis of the recommendations accepted in that review, wide ranging reforms had been undertaken to improve access to justice, the rule of law and access to economic and social rights, particularly for the poor and the vulnerable.

10. Of specific mention was the entrenchment in the Constitution of the Kenya National Commission on Human Rights, the National Gender and Equality Commission and the Commission on Administrative Justice. This entrenchment provided the Commissions with the necessary independence to monitor the observance of human rights in the country by both public and private bodies.

11. Turning to the criminal justice system, Kenya indicated that wide ranging reforms in the justice sector had seen the creation of a strong judiciary that was adequately empowered to uphold the supremacy of the Constitution, improve the administration of justice, enforce the respect for human rights and ensure that legislation and government actions were in line with constitutional provisions. The judiciary benefitted from a distinctly independent and considerably enhanced budget, selected its judges independently and had undertaken an elaborate process for the vetting of judicial officers.

12. In ensuring the transformation of the police service, Kenya reported that various constitutional, legislative and administrative measures had been taken. All police officers were undergoing a vetting process against a set of criteria relating to professionalism, integrity, performance record and psychological fitness. More than 17,000 police officers have been trained and sensitized on the respect for human rights. An independent police oversight authority was established in 2011.

13. With regard to recommendations concerning the humanizing of correctional facilities, Kenya noted the efforts made to reduce overcrowding in correctional facilities and create a more humane environment.

14. In order to protect and empower women and promote girls, Kenya stressed that measures had been taken, including the constitutional guarantee for women to contest elections and seek other appointive positions; the achievement of gender parity in primary school enrolment; and the enactment of legislation to increase women's access to land ownership and use through inheritance and personal acquisition. It also noted that the enactment of the Prohibition of Female Genital Mutilation Act 2011, aimed at preventing and punishing female genital mutilation, which had been practised by a few communities in the country, was a key milestone.

15. With regard to the recommendations on the prevention of torture, Kenya stated that the Constitution provided safeguards for the prevention of torture. It noted that the Prevention of Torture Bill 2014 had been drafted through a consultative process and was awaiting submission to the Cabinet for approval. Furthermore, it noted that the training curriculum for police officers incorporated practical training on the respect for human rights, including the prohibition of torture and ill-treatment, which were also strongly prohibited under the Police Service Act.

16. Kenya noted that it had received recommendations on the status of internally displaced persons and that it had taken significant measures to settle all persons who had been displaced after the 2007 elections and forest evictions.

17. In relation to the protection of the right of freedom to information, Kenya mentioned the development of the Access to Information and Data Protection Bills 2013, aimed at giving effect to article 35 of the Constitution of Kenya, which provides for citizens' right to gain access to information held by the Government and its agencies. The Bills have been published and are awaiting consultation and tabling in parliament.
18. Kenya reported that it continued to cooperate fully with human rights special procedures and mandate-holders from the United Nations and the African human rights system. It has hosted the Special Rapporteur on the human right to safe drinking water and sanitation and the Special Rapporteur on the human rights of internally displaced persons.
19. Kenya emphasized that it had cooperated and continued to cooperate fully with the International Criminal Court, in accordance with its obligations under the Rome Statute. Despite protocol and professional etiquette demanding that Kenya not disclose the actual nature of this cooperation, the Government of Kenya has provided all the required documentation, given access to court files and witness testimonies and granted the Court the requisite immunities and privileges to support its activities.
20. Kenya also emphasized that it had put in place measures to give effect to socioeconomic rights, despite huge budgetary challenges experienced by the country.
21. To improve access to water and sanitation, particularly in arid and semi-arid areas, the Maruba Dam was completed in the Machakos area, with water storage capacity and treatment capacity serving 100,000 people. In Nairobi, the Sasumua Dam has been rehabilitated substantially to reduce water shortage.
22. Concerning the food security situation, the Government, through the Ministry of Agriculture, Livestock and Fisheries, has various projects in place to address food security challenges.
23. To improve the quality of education and ease the financial burden on many households, the allocation of free tuition in secondary schools and free primary education has been increased by 33 per cent in the 2014–2015 fiscal budget. This was a major step towards ensuring that primary schooling and secondary education was truly free within the following three years. Efforts have also been made to ensure that no child misses out on school owing to poverty.
24. The Government of Kenya has committed itself to ensuring the right to adequate housing through a number of policies, as well as legislative and programmatic interventions. Other interventions include encouraging the private sector to invest in affordable quality housing through a variety of incentives, and the introduction of appropriate cost-effective building technology.
25. With regard to the recommendations made on the protection of indigenous peoples, Kenya stated that its Constitution provided several avenues for the protection and strengthening of indigenous peoples' personal and collective rights. Indigenous communities' issues were addressed within the purview of vulnerable and marginalized groups.
26. Kenya highlighted a few achievements of the Government since the previous review, including the creation of and seamless transition to a devolved system of government from the centralized system, with little disruption to service delivery.
27. With regard to gender equality, Kenya emphasized that more than 21 per cent of parliamentary representatives were female, the highest ever in the country's history. The Government of Kenya abolished all maternity charges in public facilities in June 2013, a measure that has helped to reduce maternal mortality rates.

28. Concerning terrorism, Kenya indicated that it had on several occasions become a victim of terror attacks, which have had a negative impact on the full realization of human rights and fundamental freedoms. Lives had been lost and property destroyed. Travel advisories issued against Kenya have dealt a blow to the tourism industry, which plays a very important role in the national economy. Guided by relevant United Nations resolutions, Kenya has embarked on establishing the institutional, policy and legal structures to safeguard the security of the nation from terrorism. The recent Security Laws Amendment Act 2014 had been perceived as likely to hinder the enjoyment of human rights and freedoms. This suggestion was unfounded. A review of the Act will reveal its similarities to legislation in comparable jurisdictions.

29. Kenya invited the international community and the members of the Working Group on the Universal Periodic Review to form partnerships with it, provide it with support towards the realization of human rights awareness campaigns and offer greater international support for the provision of services to the refugee population hosted in Kenya.

B. Interactive dialogue and responses by the State under review

30. During the interactive dialogue, 96 delegations made statements. The recommendations made during the dialogue can be found in section II of the present report.

31. Serbia encouraged Kenya to invest further efforts in preventive care so as to improve the health of the general population.

32. Sierra Leone commended Kenya for the progress made since its first review and on the democratic general elections of 2013.

33. Singapore took note that Kenya had made progress in achieving the goals of its Vision 2030 since the first review.

34. Slovakia expressed concern regarding attacks and threats against human rights defenders and media. It encouraged Kenya to ensure that schools are provided with sufficient funds.

35. Slovenia referred to its previous recommendation on ending female genital mutilation and called on Kenya to ensure the enforcement of the Prohibition of Female Genital Mutilation Act 2011.

36. South Africa encouraged Kenya to continue all efforts towards the promotion of human rights, including the right to development.

37. South Sudan commended Kenya for the holding of free and fair elections in 2013, and the empowerment of persons with disabilities.

38. Spain commended the introduction of the new Constitution in 2010 and the recognition in this Constitution of the right of access to water.

39. Sri Lanka commended Kenya on the implementation of the recommendation in its first UPR review to enshrine a bill of rights within the new Constitution.

40. The Sudan commended the holding of peaceful elections in 2013 and the legislative and policymaking developments in the field of human rights.

41. Sweden expressed concerns regarding media legislation, the implementation of the Kenyan Public Benefits Organization Act and the criminalization of consensual adult same-sex conduct.

42. Switzerland expressed concerns regarding violations of journalists' human rights, and Kenya's refusal to cooperate with the International Criminal Court, despite ratifying the Rome Statute.
43. Thailand welcomed the promulgation of the new Constitution containing a bill of rights that provides explicit protection to vulnerable and marginalized populations.
44. Timor-Leste noted positive steps, including the adoption of the Counter-Trafficking in Persons Act and developments relating to women and children's rights.
45. Togo encouraged Kenya to give priority to implementing the recommendations of the Truth, Justice and Reconciliation Commission.
46. Trinidad and Tobago noted efforts to improve the quality of life and strides to bolster food security and agriculture.
47. Tunisia encouraged Kenya to complete its human rights legal arsenal and welcomed the creation of the Independent Policing Oversight Authority and the witness protection programme.
48. Turkey commended the successful 2013 general elections. It noted that Kenya faced compound security challenges and reiterated its support in the fight against terrorism.
49. The United Arab Emirates commended progress made, in particular legal reforms and the modernization of the legal apparatus.
50. The United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland stated that the reports of abuses by security forces demonstrated a need for greater accountability and civilian oversight.
51. The United States of America expressed concern about reports of excessive force by security forces in counter-terrorism efforts and urged Kenya to uphold constitutional rights.
52. Uruguay urged Kenya to adopt measures such as awareness-raising campaigns to address the difficulties faced by persons with albinism to gain access to basic services.
53. Uzbekistan commended Kenya on the adoption of the new Constitution, the establishment of the National Commission on Human Rights and judicial reforms.
54. The Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela highlighted measures undertaken in education and in particular those aimed to ensure free tuition in schools.
55. Yemen noted the adoption of laws, including in the area of combating human trafficking and prohibiting female genital mutilation.
56. Zimbabwe commended Kenya on organizing human rights awareness campaigns as well as human rights training for public officials.
57. Albania noted that the rates of maternal mortality and transmission of HIV/AIDS from mother to child remained high.
58. Algeria welcomed efforts made to promote the enjoyment of human rights, in particular economic, social and cultural rights, and to combat violence against women.
59. Angola commended Kenya on modernizing and restructuring the judiciary in order to ensure effective and transparent administration of the judiciary.
60. Argentina expressed concern about the lack of measures to implement the report of the Truth, Justice and Reconciliation Commission.
61. Armenia noted with appreciation the efforts to promote the right to education and gender equality.

62. Australia expressed concern about lack of justice and accountability in relation to the 2007–2008 post-election violence, as well as about intimidation and ill-treatment of civil society representatives.
63. Austria remained concerned that female genital mutilation persisted and that implementation of the relevant laws was inadequate.
64. Bangladesh stated that, despite existing challenges, Kenya had made progress in the areas of health care and promoting equality between men and women.
65. Belarus noted the active cooperation of Kenya with the United Nations treaty bodies and OHCHR, as well as the efforts to eliminate poverty.
66. Belgium inquired about the implementation of the Independent Policing Oversight Authority Act of 2011, and noted with appreciation the humanitarian efforts of Kenya.
67. Benin urged Kenya to reform police services and abolish the death penalty. It called upon the international community to support the efforts of Kenya with a view to achieving socioeconomic development and promoting human rights.
68. Botswana welcomed the adoption of the Constitution and laws regarding female genital mutilation, human trafficking and the judiciary.
69. Brunei Darussalam commended Kenya on measures undertaken to provide housing to all, including young people, women and persons with disabilities, and to address environmental issues.
70. Cabo Verde noted legislative reforms in the areas of justice and anti-corruption, as well as women's representation in the elected bodies.
71. Canada noted with concern reports of extrajudicial killings, torture, mass arbitrary detentions and extortion by the police.
72. The Central African Republic highlighted the enactment of the new Constitution, a law prohibiting female genital mutilation, a law against the trafficking of persons and the judicial reform.
73. Chile underlined the enactment of the new Constitution with a view to enhancing a constitutional, legal and institutional framework in order to strengthen human rights.
74. China commended Kenya for conducting the judicial reform; promoting good governance, transparency and efficiency in the judiciary; and addressing impunity.
75. Colombia commended the steps taken by Kenya to implement the recommendations from its first UPR review, as well as its transparency and collaboration with the human rights mechanisms.
76. Comoros commended the enactment of the 2010 Constitution and adoption of the mid-term development plan 2013–2017.
77. The Congo encouraged Kenya to continue its efforts to strengthen national security in order to reduce the number of terrorist acts that had an undeniable impact on its economic growth.
78. Costa Rica highlighted the robust legal framework as well as judicial reforms in order to have robust and independent mechanisms capable of monitoring the effective promotion and protection of human rights.
79. Cuba noted progress in reforms of the judicial system and police, the protection of women, assistance for internally displaced persons and the fight against corruption.

80. Responding to questions, Kenya indicated that, since the adoption of the Constitution in 2010, it had promulgated a piece of legislation that addressed the questions of how Kenya ratified treaties and processed them into domestication legislation.

81. Regarding human rights defenders, Kenya stated that it was committed to open, transparent and democratic constitutional system. Kenya welcomed the work of independent human rights defenders. It underlined the actions that had been taken by the Government in a few cases of interference in the work of human rights defenders. Kenya reported that none of them was being detained in the country.

82. Regarding the International Criminal Court, Kenya stressed that its relationship with the Court was very much misunderstood. It indicated that it had been among the first countries to negotiate, ratify and domesticate the Rome Statute. It said that it would therefore be untrue to suggest that Kenya had been a reluctant participant in the work of the Court. Besides, major critical voices had come from countries that were not themselves parties to the Court. Kenya had fully cooperated with the Court since an investigation into the situation in Kenya was opened six years ago. Kenya had an extensive range of agreements with the Court and had provided immunities and privileges for the officials of the Court to work in Kenya. A permanent investigator and other officials of the Court moved freely in the country. Kenya had supplied the Court with all of the information and material that it was its duty to under Kenya laws and according to its interpretation of its international obligations. Kenya stressed that a case concerning Kenya was ongoing before the Court. The witnesses in that case were testifying in locations provided by the Government through communication equipment in a manner that had been secured by the Government. Criticism that Kenya had impeded the work the Court was most regrettable and untrue.

83. Kenya reported that it had come through a long period of national dialogue on the new Constitution. Critical social issues had been put to the various forums in which the Constitution was negotiated. The issues included abortion, death penalty and sexual identity, and particularly the use of criminal law in such cases. The issues had been divisive and the requisite political and social consensus on them was a work-in-progress. In the meantime, Kenya had not carried out any execution since 1987. On the rights of lesbian, gay, bisexual or transgender persons, Kenya stated that no individual could confirm that criminal law had been applied to them on the basis of his/her sexual orientation. It also stated that the judiciary had intervened in progressive ways, such as directing the Government to recognize the right of those who wanted to change their sexual identify in governmental documents.

84. Concerning terrorism, the question of the counter-terrorism initiatives of Kenya arose in the context of the recent Security Laws Amendment Act 2014. Kenya reiterated that the amendments had been consistent with the Constitution. The Act was pending in the High Court, which had the final pronouncement.

85. As regards gender equality and reproductive health rights, Kenya indicated that it had made very good progress in terms of gender inclusion. For example, 17 per cent of the members of the boards of private companies were women, and the highest rate of female representation in the public sector was 40 per cent. In August 2015, the Supreme Court decided that Kenya should have a framework in place to ensure the constitutional quota of women in the National Assembly and the Senate.

86. The Persons with Disability Act provided for the establishment of the National Development Fund for Persons with Disability, which became fully operational in 2009–2010. In 2014, after a delay, the second Board of Trustees had been appointed and announced in the Official Gazette.

87. On the adoption of children, Kenya indicated that it had acceded to the Hague Convention on Protection of Children and Cooperation in respect of Intercountry Adoption. It stated that it had developed guidelines on adoption, and that the National Adoption Committee handled the process on intercountry adoption. It also stated that street children were protected on an equal basis to other children under the care and protection measures established by the Children Act, 2001. The Street Family Rehabilitation Trust Fund had been established and street children were given protection, education, care and vocational training.

88. Kenya recognized that the judiciary was understaffed. Staff mapping and a skills exercise had recently been concluded with a view to addressing the staffing needs. It was, however, encouraging to note that the number of judiciary officers and magistrates had increased, as had the budget. The judiciary was committed to implementing the judiciary framework for the period 2012–2015.

89. Kenya stressed that its vibrant civil society organizations were continuously called upon to partner with the Government in the formulation of policies, legislation and programmatic processes in line with the Constitution. Civil society organizations had been involved in many processes, including in the preparation of the UPR report. Following a request by non-governmental organizations to review the proposed amendment to the Public Benefits Organization Act, the Government had set up a task force in December 2014 to explore options, secure a consensus and receive recommendations regarding the amendment.

90. Concerning poverty alleviation, the Government had reviewed the 2009 national policy on older persons and aging and the Persons with Disabilities Act to align them with the Constitution. The Government had enacted the Social Assistance Act 2013, which created an authority that was mandated with the provision of social assistance in the form of financial or social services.

91. The Government was committed to implementing the recommendations contained in the report of the Truth, Justice and Reconciliation Commission. In December 2013, the National Assembly debated and passed an amendment to the Truth, Justice and Reconciliation Commission Act to effectively allow the National Assembly to consider the report of the Commission and to provide for the immediate implementation of the recommendations contained therein. In accordance with the amendment, the Government had created an inter-agency committee to examine the recommendations, as well as the nature and scope of the implementation framework. Many of the recommendations were already being implemented.

92. On the situation of refugees, Kenya had largely pursued an open door policy by allowing a free flow of refugees into the country. That policy was characterized by the liberal admission of refugees. Despite challenges with respect to the high number of refugees and to terrorism-related incidents, Kenya was still committed to its obligations and the terms of the tripartite agreement regarding the safe and dignified voluntary repatriation of refugees to Somalia in line with international law.

93. On extrajudicial killings, torture and forced disappearance, Kenya indicated that the excessive use of power and the abuse of office by law enforcement agencies were considered criminal acts that were punishable by law. The Government had introduced police reforms, including the creation of the Independent Policing Oversight Authority, staffed by civilians.

94. The Czech Republic appreciated the information on the implementation of previous UPR recommendations.

95. The Democratic Republic of the Congo requested information on the recommendations of the Truth, Justice and Reconciliation Commission and the decentralization of the administration.
96. Denmark encouraged Kenya to take action against the incitement of hatred against lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender or intersex persons and remove barriers for their access to health services.
97. Djibouti commended the enactment of the new Constitution that strove to strengthen and protect human rights.
98. Egypt noted the enactment of the new Constitution and establishment of the National Commission on Human Rights and the Commission on the Administration of Justice.
99. Estonia encouraged Kenya to continue efforts to become party to all the main international human rights instruments.
100. Ethiopia commended the projection of its Vision 2030 initiative to become a middle-income country and encouraged Kenya to further strengthen its efforts to tackle poverty.
101. Finland made recommendations on the fight against terrorism and for women's rights.
102. France commended the constitutional and legislative reforms undertaken since the last UPR review to increase the respect for human rights.
103. Gabon commended the submission of several reports to treaty bodies, the enactment of the new Constitution and the launch of a number of judicial reforms.
104. Germany expressed concerns about the increasing number of human rights violations, in particular against asylum seekers and refugees, and reports of unlawful killings by police.
105. Ghana commended the enactment of a new Constitution and the promotion of strong institutions with a view to strengthening human rights.
106. Greece expressed concern regarding delays in enacting new national policies on freedom of information and expression.
107. The Holy See noted steps taken to protect migrants, ensure greater access to education and towards the fulfilment of basic needs.
108. India welcomed various actions to safeguard women's empowerment, while noting challenges in combating female genital mutilation.
109. Indonesia noted various actions taken to address poverty, including credit facilities and the creation of the Constituency Development Fund.
110. Ireland urged Kenya to ensure that its security procedures were in accordance with international human rights principles and expressed concern at reports of intimidation of human rights defenders.
111. Israel recognized national security challenges given the upsurge in terrorist attacks and noted the measures taken to simultaneously protect citizens and respect human rights.
112. Japan welcomed the expansion of rights and the promotion of devolved governance under the new Constitution. It hoped that the resulting progress in rural development would advance human rights in Kenya.

113. Kuwait noted with interest the national report on the efforts made to implement the recommendations previously accepted, and the progress achieved in advancing national priorities.
114. Latvia expressed concerns about torture and extrajudicial killings and attacks on journalists, bloggers and media workers, as well as the lack of cooperation with International Criminal Court investigations.
115. Lesotho commended efforts resulting from the first review. It referenced national priorities and initiatives for the advancement of human rights.
116. Libya credited progress in the implementation of recommendations accepted during the first cycle and commended the goal towards achieving free education.
117. Liechtenstein noted the International Criminal Court case and urged that responses to terrorist threats comply with international obligations.
118. Lithuania commended the introduction of a moratorium on the death penalty and welcomed the enactment of the Prohibition of Female Genital Mutilation Act 2011.
119. Madagascar encouraged Kenya to continue its programmes on health, justice, education, employment and combating poverty in Kenya.
120. Malaysia referenced the implementation of previous recommendations on combating gender-based violence and trafficking in women and girls, and lauded the adoption of the National Policy and Action Plan on Human Rights.
121. Mali referenced economic and social achievements and efforts to implement previously accepted recommendations.
122. Mauritania commended achievements in human rights, including progress in the areas of justice, education and health, and the protection and empowerment of women in public life.
123. Mauritius commended Kenya's commitment to human rights and the inclusion of rights-based approaches in the Constitution.
124. Mexico welcomed the new Constitution and noted its economic, social and cultural rights provisions and protection of vulnerable groups.
125. Montenegro requested information on activities to eliminate child prostitution and trafficking, as well as on violence against street children and the lack of appropriate care for them.
126. Morocco commended judicial and legal aid reform and praised the proactive role of national institutions in promoting human rights.
127. Myanmar commended the adoption of legislative and policy measures that enabled better enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms.
128. Namibia welcomed the formulation of policies that aim to enhance the enjoyment of rights and make the International Bill of Human Rights a reality for Kenyans.
129. The Netherlands expressed concerns about restrictive legislation on civil society and emphasized the need to ensure that counter-terrorism measures conform to human rights obligations.
130. Nicaragua welcomed the review of a large number of laws as a sign that the UPR was bearing fruit, and noted progress in gender equality.
131. The Niger commended the strengthening of the legal and institutional framework for human rights protection and a progressive bill of rights.

132. Norway acknowledged the important role of civil society in development and the commitment of Kenya to ensuring that extractive industries comply with human rights.
133. The Philippines noted with appreciation the expansion of human rights protection, and the progressive realisation of socioeconomic rights.
134. Poland acknowledged progress on legal and institutional frameworks for combating female genital mutilation.
135. Portugal commended cooperation with the special procedures of the Human Rights Council and noted the existing moratorium on the death penalty.
136. The Republic of Korea welcomed the new Constitution, which provides better protection and fulfilment of human rights as well as improvements in political and governance structures.
137. The Russian Federation commended judicial reform, the creation of the Judges and Magistrates Vetting Board and reform in the police and penitentiary system.
138. Rwanda commended progress on human rights since the first review of Kenya and appreciated its significant role in upholding the core values of the East Africa Community.
139. Senegal commended the significant progress of Kenya on human rights since its first review. It praised the “Vision 2030” initiative as important for promoting poverty reduction and economic development.
140. Brazil referred to the remaining challenges, including in the area of freedom of expression and association, and the rights of lesbian, gay, bisexual or transgender persons.
141. Kenya stressed that it was in the process of enacting the amendment to the Children Act to increase the age of criminal responsibility from 8 to 12 years. As regards post electoral violence, various efforts had been made. Some prosecutions had been completed and others were pending in courts. Kenya also highlighted efforts addressing the issue of internally displaced persons and the enactment of the Victim Protection Act 2014 in line with the recommendations of the report of the Truth, Justice and Reconciliation Commission. On the issue of lesbian, gay, bisexual or transgender persons, Kenya reported that a policy had been developed by the Ministry of Health specifically relating to them. Concerning indigenous peoples, measures had been taken to protect them and conflicts that had emerged had been settled within the law. Finally, Kenya thanked States and non-governmental organizations for the very positive contributions they had made to its review. It assured them of its commitment to both the UPR and the United Nations human rights mechanisms.
