Introduction

1. The Working Group on the Universal Periodic Review, established in accordance with Human Rights Council resolution 5/1, held its twenty-fourth session from 18 to 29 January 2016. The review of Seychelles was held at the 11th meeting on 25 January 2016. The delegation of Seychelles was headed by Ambassador Barry Faure (Secretary of State, Foreign Affairs Department). At its 17th meeting, held on 28 January 2016, the Working Group adopted the report on Seychelles.

2. On 12 January 2016, the Human Rights Council selected the following group of rapporteurs (troika) to facilitate the review of Seychelles: Albania, Kenya and Portugal.

3. In accordance with paragraph 15 of the annex to Human Rights Council resolution 5/1 and paragraph 5 of the annex to Council resolution 16/21, the following documents were issued for the review of Seychelles:

   (a) A national report submitted/written presentation made in accordance with paragraph 15 (a) (A/HRC/WG.6/24/SYC/1);
   (b) A compilation prepared by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) in accordance with paragraph 15 (b) (A/HRC/WG.6/24/SYC/2);
   (c) A summary prepared by OHCHR in accordance with paragraph 15 (c) (A/HRC/WG.6/24/SYC/3).

4. A list of questions prepared in advance by Germany, Liechtenstein, Mexico, Slovenia, Spain and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland was transmitted to Seychelles through the troika. These questions are available on the extranet of the universal periodic review.

I. Summary of the proceedings of the review process

A. Presentation by the State under review

5. The delegation of Seychelles explained that Seychelles was a young republic and a multiparty democracy, built upon the foundations of a strong culture of respect for human rights, social justice, equality and non-discrimination. It added that, since its previous universal periodic review, in 2011, significant strides had been made in terms of the promotion and protection of human rights.

6. Regarding the rights of the child, the delegation noted that Seychelles was committed to ensuring that such rights were fully respected, promoted and protected. In February 2015, the Government of Seychelles had set up a dedicated police child protection team, which specialized in child protection cases and responded to instances of neglect and child abuse, allowing such cases to be processed by law enforcement in an efficient manner. The delegation added that numerous sensitization programmes continued to be held on preventing and combating child abuse and that a juvenile detention centre was currently under development.

7. The delegation reported that Seychelles had ratified the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography, and had also signed the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on a communications procedure.
8. In terms of education, the delegation stated that Seychelles provided free primary and secondary education to all children and that compulsory secondary schooling had been increased by one year as of 2016, bringing the total years of compulsory education to 11. It also mentioned the medium-term strategy on education for the period 2013-2017 and beyond, which ensured that necessary investments were made in the sector of education.

9. The delegation noted that Seychelles remained fully committed to fighting violence against women through prevention, protection and prosecution. In that regard, the national action plan for gender-based violence for the period 2011-2015 focused on a review and harmonization of existing laws on gender-based violence, the sensitization of front-line enforcement officials, public education campaigns and mainstreaming of gender perspectives into national development plans. The delegation highlighted the fact that the Government of Seychelles was in the process of developing specific legislation on domestic violence, with regard to which wide consultation was taking place.

10. The delegation reported the enactment of the Prohibition of Trafficking in Persons Act in 2014, which formalized legislative and administrative measures to effectively combat that crime, as well as the establishment of a national coordination committee on trafficking in persons.

11. The delegation recalled that Seychelles had undergone a free, fair and peaceful presidential election process in December 2014, whereby the incumbent President, James Alix Michel, had been re-elected. The elections had been observed by local, regional and international organizations. The delegation explained that, since the first universal periodic review of Seychelles, a fully fledged electoral commission had been established and the Elections Act and Political Parties Act had been modified.

12. Regarding the right of freedom of expression, the delegation noted that licence fees to operate media establishments had been significantly reduced through legislative amendments. It added that there had been an increase in the number of newspaper outlets, as well as the opening of a new radio station and the introduction of a new Internet protocol television system. Furthermore, Seychelles was starting to work on legislation on access to information.

13. The delegation noted that Seychelles had launched its third national drug control master plan in 2014, which had been developed in recognition of the need for a coherent and holistic national response.

14. The delegation reported that Seychelles had established a national AIDS council to improve upon the national response to HIV/AIDS. A policy entitled “test and treat” had also been put in place in 2014, as part of the global strategy to reach zero deaths from HIV and AIDS infection by the year 2030.

15. The delegation stated that health education, including sex education, was provided to children in school. Furthermore, Seychelles was currently in the process of finalizing two documents: the national policy on sexual and reproductive health and the national adolescent sexual reproductive health policy, which were aimed at responding effectively to the various sexual health challenges of the country.

16. The delegation noted that Seychelles remained committed to fostering non-discrimination and equality for persons with disabilities. For instance, the national employment policy promoted employment without discrimination, including for persons with disabilities. The delegation added that the Government was in the final stages of approving the national policy and strategic framework for disability, which was designed to empower persons with disabilities to claim their rights as citizens, and to change stereotypes regarding such persons.
17. The delegation stated that the authorities were reviewing the National Human Rights Commission and the Office of the Ombudsman of Seychelles, in order to strengthen both institutions. Seychelles looked forward to having a national human rights institution which was fully compliant with the principles relating to the status of national institutions for the promotion and protection of human rights (the “Paris Principles”).

18. Regarding the penitentiary system, the delegation noted that the main prison had been refurbished, and now included, among other things, a medical facility, an auditorium, a classroom, a library, a gymnasium and a laundry room. A unit for vulnerable prisoners, such as those who were at risk of harm, persons with disabilities and elderly persons, was also under construction. The delegation added that numerous measures had been put in place for prisoners’ rehabilitation, including the resettlement day release programme and an outreach programme, which allowed prisoners to leave the prison to do voluntary work in the community.

19. The delegation reported that, following universal periodic review recommendations received in 2011, Seychelles had issued a standing invitation to the special procedure mandate holders. Since then, Seychelles had hosted the Special Rapporteur on the Right to Education and the Special Rapporteur on Trafficking in Persons, especially women and children. Both rapporteurs had issued recommendations which the Government was in the process of implementing.

20. The delegation recalled that the Seychelles Human Rights Treaty Committee had been established in 2012. That coordinative committee, composed of governmental and non-governmental agencies, was primarily tasked with assisting in the preparation of treaty reports, ensuring the dissemination of treaties and treaty body recommendations and promoting the conformity of national laws with accepted human rights standards. The delegation reported that, since its previous review, Seychelles had submitted reports under the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities and the Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of their Families. Reports to other treaty bodies under the corresponding conventions were also being finalized.

21. The delegation added that the Seychelles Human Rights Treaty Committee was also charged with overseeing the development of a five-year national action plan on human rights, which should be adopted and implemented very soon.

22. The delegation took the opportunity of the universal periodic review to present its call for the world to pay attention to the issue of protecting the environment, especially reducing gas emissions, given the irrefutable link between climate change, the environment and human rights. The delegation further called for that issue to continue being formally and urgently addressed under the legal frameworks of the United Nations and the Human Rights Council. The delegation reported the creation a new governmental department for climate change and energy, as well the adoption of numerous measures and projects to mitigate the effects of climate change in Seychelles, which included flood mitigation, increased drainage and recharging sandbanks.

23. The delegation noted that Seychelles had been advocating the concept of the blue economy, which referred to those economic activities which directly or indirectly took place in the ocean and in coastal areas and used outputs from the ocean, as well as the contribution of those activities to economic growth and social, cultural and environmental well-being. A new blue economy department had been established under the governmental structure to implement that goal.

24. To conclude, the delegation stated that Seychelles remained dedicated to progress and improvement in human rights and would continue working with civil society and the National Human Rights Commission in the follow-up to the dialogue.
B. Interactive dialogue and responses by the State under review

25. During the interactive dialogue, 60 delegations made statements. Recommendations made during the dialogue are to be found in section II of the present report.

26. The United Arab Emirates welcomed the progress achieved in the enjoyment of economic, social and cultural rights and the efforts of the Government to uphold children’s rights, such as the adoption of a national plan for child protection and the setting up of awareness programmes to combat violence against children.

27. The United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland applauded Seychelles for its recent presidential election, which had been peaceful but contested. It welcomed the replacement of the Public Order Act with more progressive legislation. It expressed concern that the National Human Rights Commission did not comply with the Paris Principles.

28. The United States of America noted the recent presidential election with the participation of international and local observers but was concerned by reports that some candidates had not been able to exercise freedom of expression and association. It commended the Constitutional Court’s decision to strike down the Public Order Act.

29. Uruguay commended Seychelles for extending a standing invitation to the special procedure mandate holders and receiving two rapporteurs. It expressed concern about the absence of a definition and an explicit prohibition of discrimination against women. It welcomed the fact that the Education Act was being revised to eliminate corporal punishment of children in schools.

30. The Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela recognized the efforts of the Government to implement the recommendations of its first universal periodic review despite the delicate situation generated by climate change. It welcomed the ratification of the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography and the implementation of the national plan to combat domestic violence.

31. Zambia welcomed the appointment of women in decision-making positions and the measures taken to prevent violence against women. It regretted the fact that the police could detain a person for 24 hours without charge, that domestic violence was not criminalized and that there was a high prevalence of sexual exploitation.

32. Zimbabwe welcomed the constant improvement of existing human rights legislation by Seychelles. It commended a number of measures to protect the rights of women, including the appointment of women to high-level decision-making positions and the adoption of a national plan to combat gender-based violence.

33. Algeria commended Seychelles for the important reforms adopted since 2011 with regard to the fight against human trafficking, the protection of the environment, food security of the population and management of disasters. It noted with satisfaction the efforts to strengthen economic, social and cultural rights.

34. Angola appreciated the determination with which Seychelles continued to review and strengthen its national legislation to make it compatible with the promotion and protection of human rights. Angola supported Seychelles in its efforts to combat crime and amend its penal code in relation to the minimum age of crime.

35. Argentina welcomed the progress achieved in implementing the recommendations received during the first cycle, in particular the measures taken to improve the education system and to guarantee the right to education.

36. Australia noted the recent focus on good governance and encouraged the Government to ensure that democracy and the rule of law were upheld through transparent, strong, effective and independent institutions, including the Human Rights Commission. It expressed concern regarding freedom of expression and commended efforts to address domestic violence.

37. Benin appreciated the national framework plan against drugs for the period 2014-2018, the advancement of gender equality in national development plans, the appointment of women to high-level decision making positions, the national action plan for gender-based violence for the period 2011-2015 and the enactment of the law on domestic violence.

38. Botswana noted policies addressing human trafficking, gender-based violence, education, food security and the administration of justice. It welcomed the police child protection team and asked for more information on how the team operated and whether it had registered any significant achievements. Reports of judicial corruption were still worrying.

39. Brazil welcomed the national gender policy and plan of action and the Gender and Law Manual. It was pleased about progress in the penitentiary system of Seychelles, including the opportunity for inmates to take courses and implementation of the resettlement day release and outreach programmes. It acknowledged amendment of the Probation of Offenders Act.

40. Burundi welcomed measures concerning the rights of children, women and persons with disabilities and the right to health. It congratulated Seychelles for establishing the Seychelles Human Rights Treaty Committee and its cooperation with treaty bodies and the special procedure mandate holders, to whom it had issued a standing invitation.

41. Cabo Verde noted that the national action plan on human rights would be an important framework for human rights efforts. Institutional solutions concerning the right to information and independence of the media should be pursued. Cabo Verde hoped that the small island State of Seychelles would benefit from substantial international cooperation.

42. Canada commended Seychelles for its commitment to the principles of equal opportunity and social justice through targeted social programmes and investments in health care and education. It encouraged continued efforts in those areas.

43. Chad noted that Seychelles was a party to most of the international legal instruments and cooperated with treaty bodies, both at the regional and international levels. It also noted the country’s legislative and institutional framework to strengthen the rights of children, women and persons with disabilities, as well as the media.

44. Chile valued the information contained in the national report that reflected progress in the area of human rights.

45. China appreciated the efforts made by Seychelles to implement first-cycle recommendations related to the enhancement of human rights mechanisms and the rule of law, and to improve cooperation with human rights bodies. It noted the progress achieved in the enjoyment of the rights to education and health.

46. On the comment made on children’s participation, the delegation of Seychelles stated that this issue was of great importance for the Government and that such participation was encouraged through many platforms, such as the National Youth Assembly and the National Youth Committee.

47. On the question of the Government’s plans to improve the electoral process in advance of Assembly elections in 2016, the delegation noted the electoral reform process that had been undertaken from 2011 to 2013, which had already brought significant legislative amendments and improvements to electoral processes. The delegation also noted that further changes to the electoral process must be initiated by the Electoral Commission, which the Government could subsequently consider.

48. Regarding the query on how the Government intended to improve the Office of the Ombudsman and the National Human Rights Commission to enable them to meet international standards, the delegation stated that the Government had initiated the review of the legal and administrative frameworks of both institutions, with a view to strengthening them and making them fully compliant with the Paris Principles. The delegation added that the Government recognized that both institutions required further human and financial resources in order to fulfil their mandates effectively, and would address that challenge as part of the review.

49. On the issue of when the Government of Seychelles intended to repeal section 151 of the Penal Code to decriminalize same-sex relationships, the delegation reported that the Government was conducting an overarching review of the Penal Code, under which section 151 would also be considered. No decision had been taken as to whether section 151 would be amended. The delegation noted that no one had ever been tried under section 151 (c) on the basis of his or her sexual orientation.

50. Regarding the question on the steps taken to prevent domestic violence, the delegation replied that sensitization programmes were used to educate the general population at all levels. The Government was also placing a lot of emphasis on capacity-building of law enforcement officers. The delegation added that victims of domestic violence could seek protection orders under the Family Violence Protection of Victims Act through the Family Tribunal. That Tribunal would be placed under the administration of the Supreme Court in the near future. The delegation stated that a new police child protection team had been established in 2015 to respond to child abuse, and that police stations had been decentralized to facilitate reporting of domestic violence cases. Furthermore, a domestic violence bill was expected to be adopted during the coming year.

51. On the question on plans to decriminalize defamation and what measures had been taken to ensure that restrictions on the freedoms of expression and opinion were compliant with international standards, the delegation recalled that those freedoms were fundamental rights protected in the Constitution. However, the delegation noted that a balancing act was needed when human rights conflicted with one another, for example the right to privacy and dignity with freedom of expression. According to the delegation, the provision of defamation was necessary to maintain the effective protection of persons and prevent the infringement of fundamental rights.

52. Regarding the implementation of social policies, the delegation reported that, in 2011, the country had launched a social renaissance campaign aimed at strengthening social policies. A national policy on family was awaiting governmental approval and a policy on the elderly was currently under development.

53. To reply to comments on freedom of expression for political parties, the delegation stated that all political parties, including the opposition ones, had equal access to media. The Elections Act allowed every registered candidate to broadcast matters related to elections. Noting that there had been complaints that one or two candidates had not had the right to express themselves, the delegation stated that there had been total freedom of expression and equal access to the media.

54. With regard to the efforts made by Seychelles to promote gender mainstreaming and to provide a specific definition of discrimination against women under the law, the delegation stated that the National Gender Management Team, composed of State and non-State actors, continued to provide support and direction for gender mainstreaming initiatives within the national institutions. It added that the Constitution guaranteed that every person had the right to equal protection under the law without any discrimination on any grounds. Finally, the delegation noted that the Gender and Law Manual had been published in 2013 to guide the judiciary on interpreting the laws in a manner consistent with human rights obligations.

55. On the issue of the detention of persons for more than 24 hours without charge, the delegation stated that 24 hours gave time to the police to investigate the alleged offence of which a suspect was accused in accordance with the Penal Code and the Constitution.

56. Pakistan commended measures to strengthen the National Human Rights Commission and the Office of the Ombudsman, the legal and judicial system and the rights of women, such as the national action plan on gender-based violence, measures relating to the rights of persons with disabilities and the rights of migrant workers and measures against human trafficking.

57. The Democratic Republic of the Congo congratulated Seychelles for providing housing to its citizens, especially through programmes concerning social housing and aimed at allowing citizens to own their own housing. It noted that the Ombudsman also being president of the National Human Rights Commission did not guarantee the independence of those institutions.

58. Denmark welcomed the fact that Seychelles had accepted recommendations to ratify the Optional Protocol to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment during its first universal periodic review and hoped that steps were being taken towards that goal. It noted that the initial report of Seychelles to the Committee against Torture was long overdue. It highlighted that the Convention against Torture Initiative stood ready to assist Seychelles on those issues.

59. Djibouti commended the literacy rate among women but was concerned at the social obstacles young pregnant women were facing in continuing their schooling. Persons with disabilities did not have adequate access to health care, information, education and decent work. It referred to the finding of the Committee on the Rights of the Child that children with disabilities were not fully integrated in the school system.

60. Egypt commended progress on the rights of children, women and persons with disabilities, political participation, education and health. It acknowledged the Seychelles Human Rights Treaty Committee and implementation of a legal and policy framework on human trafficking. It was encouraged by the development of a national action plan on human rights.

61. Ethiopia commended the Prohibition of Trafficking in Persons Act, the Food Act and the Local Government Act. The submission of treaty reports and the establishment of the Seychelles Human Rights Treaty Committee, amid its financial and expert constraints, demonstrated political commitment. Ethiopia called upon the international community to provide financial and technical assistance.

62. Fiji noted that Seychelles faced unique human rights challenges as a small island developing State. It would be important to make a linkage on how the consequences of climate change had an impact on the rights of the citizens of Seychelles. Fiji was concerned about overreliance on pretrial detention and the increase in the prison population.

63. Germany commended Seychelles for its engagement with international human rights mechanisms and its willingness to further improve the legislative framework for human rights.

64. Ghana recognized the 2014 Prohibition of Trafficking in Persons Act, and was concerned that corporal punishment, contrary to its prohibition in the Children’s Act, was still prevalent in homes, penal institutions, day-care centres and schools.
65. Haiti noted the self-evaluation by Seychelles of the National Human Rights Commission and the Office of the Ombudsman in order to bring them into compliance with the Paris Principles.

66. The Holy See acknowledged the development of a five-year national action plan on human rights and recognized the attention given to promoting education through the medium-term strategy on education for the period 2013-2017 and beyond.

67. India encouraged the Government to further review the effectiveness of the current framework of the National Human Rights Commission and welcomed the efforts to eliminate the judicial backlog. It also encouraged Seychelles to continue harmonizing domestic legislation with the Convention on the Rights of the Child and to take a systematic approach to gender mainstreaming.

68. Indonesia welcomed the efforts to strengthen the National Human Rights Commission in conformity with the Paris Principles and develop a national action plan on human rights. It recognized the measures taken by the Government to ensure the implementation of international human rights instruments ratified by Seychelles.

69. Iraq expressed its appreciation for the efforts of the Government to implement first-cycle recommendations. It noted the achievements of the Government in the area of human rights, such as the establishment of a national human rights commission and the adoption of a medium-term strategy for the education sector for the period 2013-2017.

70. Jamaica noted that, since its first review, Seychelles had made strides in reforming and enacting legislation in various areas, in cooperation with civil society and the international community. It commended the Government for its advocacy on behalf of the blue economy and climate change, and for strides made in renewable energy.

71. Libya commended Seychelles for the positive developments since the first cycle of its universal periodic review, including a national campaign to combat smoking and the adoption of the flexible employment programme aimed at increasing employment opportunities for vulnerable groups.

72. Maldives noted high levels of educational enrolment and achievement by girls. It encouraged Seychelles to continue reaching out to international partners, including OHCHR, for financial and technical assistance and commended Seychelles for raising the challenges of small island developing States in international forums, and for initiatives to combat the effects of climate change.

73. With regard to the concrete measures that the Government was taking to shorten the length of pretrial detention, the delegation of Seychelles indicated that the strategic plan of the judiciary for the period 2010-2014 recognized case backlogs as a key area in need of attention. Significant improvements had been made in that regard. The number of judges had been increased and the Supreme Court and Court of Appeal had moved into new premises, enabling the improved use of technology in court proceedings, which had allowed for easier disposal of cases and reduction of delays. The introduction of an electronic case flow management system had also improved the speed and efficacy of case flow management. The delegation stated that such measures had led to all criminal cases filed prior to 2008 having been concluded in the Court of Appeal, Magistrate Court and Supreme Court. Ninety-six per cent of ongoing cases had been filed between 2013 and 2015.

74. On the question on the ways in which Seychelles enforced existing laws to protect women and children from domestic violence and abuse, the delegation noted that domestic violence and gender-based violence cases could often go unreported, an unfortunate occurrence seen across the world. It added that legislative measures against domestic and gender-based violence must be implemented in a cohesive and harmonized manner in order to effect change. In that regard, numerous awareness-raising activities and training sessions had been held for law enforcement officers, social workers and health workers, in order to build upon their capacities and skills with regard to responding to, identifying and prosecuting cases of domestic and gender-based violence, as well as providing effective protection to victims.

75. The delegation recalled that a new police child protection team had been established in February 2015 specifically to respond to cases of child abuse. The Director for Social Services was also empowered by the Children’s Act to intervene in ongoing cases for the protection of children when the need arose.

76. With regard to the question on what concrete measures Seychelles was taking to enhance pluralism in the media, the delegation reported that Seychelles had made amendments which had significantly reduced the license fees for the operation of commercial radio, television and newspaper outlets. The delegation stated that the Government continued fostering an atmosphere that was conducive to imparting and receiving diverse points of view.

77. The delegation stated that the Government treated the issue of drugs and narcotics with the greatest seriousness. It had set up a detox unit and wellness centre which provided rehabilitation services for drug users. The delegation added that the authorities continued to liaise with international partners for further support, especially for capacity-building and training of staff. Furthermore, Seychelles had implemented strict laws on the use and trafficking of drugs and could impose a life sentence upon the perpetrators of drug trafficking.

78. The delegation noted that efforts to improve access to services, such as education and health, by persons with disabilities were ongoing. It mentioned that a national policy and an action plan on disability had been finalized. The inclusive policy on education and training had been adopted in 2014 and the National Council for the Disabled continued to take action towards disability mainstreaming.

79. Regarding the issue of outstanding reports under treaty bodies, the delegation stated that the resources of Seychelles were very tight and that it was difficult to keep up with the heavy reporting burden. However, as mentioned in the introductory statement, Seychelles had submitted various reports since its previous review.

80. The delegation noted that Seychelles would carefully study the Optional Protocol to the Convention against Torture with a view to possible signature and ratification.

81. The delegation stated that the policy of the Minister of Education allowed for teenage mothers to continue to go school while pregnant and to return to school after giving birth. Teenage mothers could receive support from different government agencies to continue their education if they chose to.

82. The delegation reported that the Education Act would be amended to prohibit corporal punishment in schools.

83. On the question of improving education, the delegation mentioned that the medium-term strategy on education for the period 2015-2017 covered 13 main components and related interventions or actions, and that Seychelles would receive technical and financial assistance from the World Bank regarding the implementation of that strategy.

84. With regard to the question of strengthening the gender secretariat, the delegation recalled that this secretariat had a monitoring and evaluation role. It developed policies and guidelines and sought to mainstream gender across sectors. The Government was committed to strengthening the gender secretariat, but it was also affected by human resource constraints that the country faced in many expert fields.
85. Mauritius commended multiple developments, including enhancing the credibility of the electoral process, and offered congratulations for the successful 2015 elections. It commended the development of a national action plan on human rights and acknowledged initiatives boosting economic prosperity. Mauritius encouraged Seychelles to pursue awareness-raising efforts on workers’ rights issues.

86. Mexico welcomed the progress made by Seychelles in implementing the recommendations of the first universal periodic review cycle, in particular the adoption of a gender policy and plan of action to eliminate gender inequality. It also praised the national policy aimed at guaranteeing the rights of persons with disabilities.

87. Montenegro noted the concerns of the Committee on the Rights of the Child and asked Seychelles about steps taken to protect children. It wanted to learn more about the investigation of domestic violence cases, the adoption of a comprehensive law specifically criminalizing domestic violence, including marital rape, and activities strengthening victim assistance and rehabilitation.

88. Morocco commended the Seychelles Human Rights Treaty Committee and the Institute of Early Childhood Development. It encouraged Seychelles to request technical assistance to strengthen its National Human Rights Commission and bring it into compliance with the Paris Principles. Morocco underlined efforts to promote equality in the workplace.

89. Namibia applauded Seychelles for its legislative reforms such as the Prohibition of Trafficking in Persons Act, the Animal and Biosecurity Act, the Food Act and the Disaster Management Act, and for strides made since 2011 towards eliminating case backlogs in the criminal justice system.

90. The Netherlands welcomed the inclusion of a wide range of women’s rights in national legislation and the high level of female representation in national institutions, but remained concerned about the state of enforcement of legislation to eliminate gender-based violence.

91. The Niger noted with satisfaction the reinforcement of the legislative framework on media independence and radio broadcasting, the prohibition of trafficking in persons, protection of victims of trafficking and prevention measures. It welcomed the creation of the institute for the development of youth.

92. Nigeria commended efforts aimed at promoting the right of the child through, inter alia, the revamping of the National Commission for Child Protection, the establishment of a police child protection team and the enactment of the Local Government Act of 2015 aimed at involving people in local governance and decision-making processes.

93. Cuba noted the progress achieved in the protection of the rights of the child, the provision of primary health services to the entire population and protection of the rights of people with disabilities. It also commended the establishment of the Commission on Human Rights Treaties.

94. Panama recalled that, as a result of the first universal periodic review of Seychelles, the Government had established a national human rights institution and passed laws aimed at the promotion and protection of human rights.

95. The Philippines welcomed the establishment of the Seychelles Human Rights Treaty Committee. It was concerned about the apparent lack of strategy with regard to promoting education and the continued lack of appropriate treatment accorded to persons with disabilities, migrants and refugees, as well as inadequate freedom of expression.

96. Portugal welcomed the standing invitation to the special procedure mandate holders. It commended Seychelles for considering establishing an interministerial committee responsible for the implementation of its international human rights obligations. Portugal was concerned about the incidence of sexual exploitation of children, including child sex tourism.

97. Senegal welcomed the creation of the National Human Rights Commission, the establishment of the Office of the Ombudsman and the ratification of the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography. It called on the international community to provide Seychelles with the necessary assistance.

98. Singapore commended Seychelles for providing full access to safe water and sanitation for all persons in the country and welcomed its commitment to the rehabilitation and reintegration of offenders in prison in order to help them to gain vocational skills and employment by the national programmes created.

99. Slovenia was concerned about the child legislation that had not yet been fully aligned with the Convention and about the lack of a comprehensive and systematic approach to gender mainstreaming. It regretted reports of a persistence of stereotypes regarding the roles of women and men in family and society.

100. South Africa commended Seychelles for its political will and efforts in promoting and protecting human rights in its country, including the adoption of several legislative and institutional measures, as well as the noticeable representation of women in decision-making bodies and the roll-out of the housing programme and education strategy.

101. Spain commended Seychelles for the ratification of the Convention on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women and its Optional Protocol, as it had been recommended by Spain during the previous review, and also recognized the progress in protecting the rights of persons with disabilities and the existence of a national council on that matter.

102. Togo commended Seychelles for its determination in combating trafficking in persons, as well as for the creation of the National Commission for the Protection of the Child. It welcomed the efforts undertaken to reform the judicial system to make it more efficient.

103. Trinidad and Tobago commended Seychelles for the introduction of several pieces of legislation and the review of policies relating to, inter alia, early childhood development, tertiary education, employment and health. It added that programmes for rehabilitation, reconciliation and reintegration into the society of Seychelles were exemplary.

104. Noting that Seychelles had already signed several international agreements on corruption, Turkey encouraged the Government of Seychelles to start the process of enacting the law establishing an independent anti-corruption commission. It commended Seychelles for having issued a standing invitation to the special procedure mandate holders.

105. Ukraine was pleased to observe that, in 2015, the presidential elections had been held in a calm and peaceful atmosphere and that the fundamental rights of the electorate had been respected. It acknowledged positive developments in the legislative process, in particular the adoption of legal acts in the areas of education, media and security.

106. Aware of the impact of climate change on small island developing nations, Italy welcomed the Government’s leadership and efforts on that issue and the decision to progressively increase the use of renewable sources of energy. It praised the attention devoted to women’s and children’s rights.

108. The delegation of Seychelles responded to the advance question on the achievements of the National Commission for Child Protection with regard to the improvement of the system of protection of children and adolescents, and the reform of the Education Act with specific reference to corporal punishment. The National Commission for Child Protection was set up under the Children Act in 2005 as an advisory body bringing together all stakeholders to propose policies and advise the Government on all matters pertaining to child protection. The delegation noted that, since its inception, the Commission had coordinated actions to incorporate the Convention on the Rights of the Child into domestic law and had validated the reports to the Committee on the Rights of the Child. The Education Act was in the process of being reformed, and was going through the necessary governmental approval processes.

109. On the question of what laws, campaigns or policies had been enacted since the previous cycle to eliminate gender inequality in access to opportunities and remuneration for men and women, and whether a gender perspective had been incorporated into other national development plans, the delegation noted that the national employment policy of 2014 had been aimed at promoting gender equality and putting in place mechanisms to ensure equal and fair treatment for both men and women. Mainstreaming gender into national development plans was an ongoing activity and was supported by the National Gender Management Team. The delegation mentioned that the national gender policy was expected to be launched during the first quarter of the year.

110. Regarding the advance question on efforts made to improve the capacities of the police and national security forces vis-à-vis human rights, the delegation responded that modules on human rights as well as humanitarian law had been incorporated into the Police Academy. Specific training on issues such as gender-based violence and trafficking in persons had also been held for front-line law enforcement officials. The delegation added that, in the light of the fight of Seychelles against piracy and the capture and prosecution of Somali pirates, Seychelles defence forces had received capacity-building and training, which had improved upon the skills of national security forces to treat captured pirates in a manner that was fully respectful of human rights.

111. The delegation responded to the advance question on the implementation of its previous recommendation issued in 2011 regarding access to safe drinking water and sanitation, and the current status of those services. As of 2010, 93 per cent of households in Seychelles had treated water, and 97 percent of the population had sanitation facilities. The delegation added that the Public Utilities Corporation in Seychelles continued to strive towards ensuring full access to safe drinking water and sanitation for all persons. With regard to sanitation, refurbishment of existing sewer networks was ongoing, and there were plans to expand the existing networks.

112. The delegation stated that the Government was considering the provisions of the Kampala Amendments and their implications for implementation in order to determine the position of Seychelles on ratification.

113. The delegation mentioned that Seychelles was currently developing specific legislation to address domestic violence and that the Penal Code already criminalized any sexual assault or rape.

114. On the protection of children’s rights, the delegation recalled what it had said earlier: that a new police child protection team had been established to respond to cases of child abuse and that the Director for Social Services could intervene in ongoing cases for the protection of children.

115. The delegation noted that a national health policy had been approved in 2015 and that a national health strategic plan had been developed. It also thanked Cuba for providing technical assistance to the national health sector.
116. The delegation underlined that Seychelles already had an inter-ministerial committee on human rights, which played a role in drafting reports under treaty bodies.

117. The delegation noted that Seychelles had ratified the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities and was in the process of carrying out consultations for the ratification of the Optional Protocol to the Convention.

118. On the issue of human rights education, the delegation mentioned that secondary school students were taught their rights and freedoms, which included those contained in chapter III of the Constitution—the Seychellois Charter of Fundamental Human Rights and Freedoms. Citizenship education had also been incorporated into the primary school curriculum, which touched upon human rights issues. The delegation added that the national action plan on human rights that the Government was working on was expected to develop a road map for human rights education.

119. To conclude, the delegation stated that the Government of Seychelles would study the recommendations received during the review with great interest and looked forward to communicating its views to the universal periodic review secretariat and the troika in due course. It reiterated the country’s plea regarding human rights and climate change. Noting that not enough had been done to prevent and to mitigate the erosion of the planet, the delegation called upon the States and organizations present at the session to push that agenda further at all forums for the right of Seychellois to exist now and in the future.

II. Conclusions and/or recommendations
