  - (b) A compilation prepared by OHCHR in accordance with paragraph 15 (b) (A/HRC/WG.6/13/ECU/2);
  - (c) A summary prepared by OHCHR in accordance with paragraph 15 (c) (A/HRC/WG.6/13/ECU/3).
4. A list of questions prepared in advance by Germany, Iceland, Netherlands, Norway, Slovenia, Sweden, United Kingdom was transmitted to Ecuador through the troika. These questions are available on the extranet of the UPR.

I. Summary of the proceedings of the review process

A. Presentation by the State under review

5. The delegation noted that during the last four years, Ecuador has undertaken efforts towards reaffirming its commitment towards human rights, peace and democratic stability. Since 2008, a new Constitution gave rise to a new model of state and development. The nation has recovered trust in the democratic system, a fundamental prerequisite for the enjoyment of human rights.
6. The Constitution established that in addition to being a state of rights and justice, Ecuador is an intercultural and multi-ethnic State, in which different groups of people and ethnic nationalities live in an environment of mutual respect and solidarity. It established the paradigm of the “buen vivir” or “Szumak Kawsay, a concept coming from the peoples originating from the Andean region, which relies on the comprehensive development of all its citizens, peoples and nationalities without any form of discrimination.
7. Ecuador considers that it can demonstrate that it has moved from the theory to the practice in the fulfilment of human rights. Ecuador referred in particular to its efforts to combat poverty, through sovereign economic policies. In response to social movements, the government declared illegitimate part of its public external debt, which has made it possible to increase its investment in the production, roads and energy. Ecuador also undertook important efforts with regard to the culture of tax payments, which resulted in the collection of more taxes. These efforts resulted in a significant reduction of unemployment and underemployment; and an increase in the investment on education, health, housing, social security, environment, social inclusion and other areas.

8. Ecuador is now pioneer in the implementation of public policies of new collective rights, such as the fundamental right to water and the recognition of the rights of nature in the Constitution. In this regard, Ecuador has undertaken preventive measures and restricted activities which can lead to the extinction of species, the destruction of eco-systems or the permanent alteration of natural cycles.
9. Ecuador has also taken significant steps to securing the right to food. The Constitution establishes the principle of food sovereignty and the rights of all persons and groups to have access to healthy, sufficient and nutritious food. More than half a million children have thus benefitted through child development services.
10. The incidence of child labour has also decreased and child labour in garbage areas has been eradicated.
11. With regard to the situation of economic, social and cultural rights, Ecuador noted that it has undertaken affirmative actions to incorporate in the public sector, persons which are part of priority groups, such as persons with disabilities, indigenous peoples, Afro-Ecuadorian, Montubio people and women.
12. The Government has eliminated tertiary labour, the recruitment by hour, recruitment through intermediaries, and other forms of labour conditions which were considered a form of slavery. Ecuador is committed to decrease the rate of unemployment and underemployment. The percentage of workers with social security affiliation has also grown in 2011.
13. As regards to education, the Constitution establishes mandatory education until secondary and free until the third university level. Ecuador has also significantly increased its spending on education.
14. With regard to the right to health, Ecuador has established it as right to be fulfilled by the State, and is closely linked with the enjoyment of other rights, such as the right to water, food, education, physical education, work, social security, a good environment and other rights that form the basis of good living.
15. As regards to the right to housing, Ecuador has also made significant efforts. As at June 2011, 70.4% of families had their own house. Housing bonuses were also provided between 2008 and 2010 to improve the population's living conditions.
16. On the subject of civil and political rights, Ecuador reported on initiatives to encourage a more active participation of the population in decision-making, and accountability mechanisms to combat corruption in all public and private sectors. For the first time, Ecuador has recognized the right to vote to Ecuadorean living abroad, to persons deprived of their liberty, to members of the armed forces and police and young adults of 16 years of age.
17. With regard to the right to freedom of expression, Ecuador guarantees to its inhabitants the right to free, intercultural, inclusive, diverse and participative communication in all areas of social interaction. It also guarantees the right to information of quality without any censorship. The right to access and use of radio frequencies and public televisions, private or communal is also guaranteed in the Constitution.
18. Ecuador made reference to reforms to the Criminal Code undertaken in 2009, such as the inclusion of the crime of genocide, in conformity with the Rome Statute, as well as other reforms.
19. Ecuador further reported on progress made in the implementation of recommendations formulated during their first review in 2008.

20. Concerning the penitentiary reform, improvement of conditions of persons deprived of their liberty and follow-mechanisms (recommendations 1, 4 and 5), Ecuador made reference to provisions in the new Constitution establishing a comprehensive social rehabilitation system. Ecuador is receiving advisory services from the United Nations Centre of Penitentiary Excellence, as well as from the School for Penitentiary Administration of France.
21. With regard to the provision of human rights training to police forces (recommendation 2), this has been established in the Constitution and has been on-going.
22. The Constitution establishes the implementation of policies for the progressive eradication of child labour and provides special protection against other type of labour or economic exploitation (recommendation 3).
23. Concerning the mainstreaming of gender (recommendation 6), Ecuador has established as a policy of incorporation of a gender perspective in all public policies, programmes and projects.
24. Regarding discrimination on the grounds of sexual and gender identity (recommendation 7), Ecuador implements measures to combat violations of the human rights in respect of gay, lesbian, bisexual, transsexual, transgender and transvestite community.
25. With regard to the eradication of gender-based violence and domestic violence (recommendation 8), it referred to provisions in the Constitution, as well as the setting up of a specialized body of judges to tackle these issues.
26. Regarding the reform of the judiciary (recommendation 9), it reported on a consultation and referendum held in 2011, and the implementation of a permanent training programme to government officials.
27. On the trafficking in persons (recommendation 10), Ecuador reported that the national plan was updated in December 2010.
28. Information on Ecuador's important efforts with regard to groups in situation of vulnerability and in need of priority attention was also provided. Reference was made to national efforts to combat poverty and extreme poverty, the human development bonus and credit programmes and the attention to persons with disabilities, children and the elderly.
29. The delegation further noted that the Constitution recognizes the rights of asylum-seekers and refugees, establishing important principles for their protection. It noted that Ecuador has been recognized by UNHCR as the country in Latin America with the highest percentage of accepting refugees.
30. To conclude, the delegation indicated that Ecuador sees itself as a plurinational and intercultural State and therefore has placed emphasis on the rights of indigenous peoples, Afro-Ecuadorians and Montubios.
31. Within the framework of the intercultural bilingual education system, for the year 2010, two thousand education centres, with six thousand teachers from various nationalities and indigenous populations were established in 16 of the 24 provinces of the country.

B. Interactive dialogue and responses by the State under review

32. During the interactive dialogue, 73 delegations made statements. Recommendations made during the dialogue are to be found in section II of the present report.
33. Venezuela (Bolivarian Republic of) noted the measures taken to eliminate child labour. It congratulated Ecuador for its work in favour of the most vulnerable groups,

It congratulated Ecuador for the changes in the Constitution and legislation, such as the inclusion of the African-descendent collective rights, as well as the programs to address discrimination based on sexual orientation.

50. Estonia noted positive changes since 2008 and welcomed legal provisions to prevent discrimination based on sexual orientation and gender identity. Estonia observed that independence of the judiciary still remained a challenge and expressed concern by some policies in the area of freedom of the press. Estonia made a recommendation.

51. Ethiopia praised Ecuador for its engagement with the universal periodic review mechanism. It highlighted efforts made by Ecuador to promote the rights of indigenous, Afro-descendent and Montubio people. Ethiopia appreciated progress made in implementation of humanitarian law at different levels and asked Ecuador to explain more about the legal reforms.

52. Finland appreciated the measures taken by Ecuador to improve the protection of children, in particular in its Constitution, and programmes implemented on birth registration. It noted however, that many children remain unregistered and asked about efforts to address this situation. Finland made recommendations.

53. Ecuador thanked delegations for the generous comments made. It noted that the definition of a policy for the promotion and protection of human rights was the vital pillar that shaped the new Constitution. Ecuador is currently focused on generating conditions for 'good living'.

54. The delegation indicated that persons deprived of their liberty are considered a priority group for State action. The budget has been increased and new detention centres to address overcrowding have been built. In addition, priority attention has been given to children who are living in the prisons with their mothers. Ecuador is also investing in the training of prison staff and wardens.

55. Ecuador noted that as a result of a referendum, a restructuring programme of the judiciary is underway. Ecuador noted that there is absolute independence of the judiciary.

56. Regarding comments made by Belgium, Canada and Costa Rica on the freedom of expression and the press, the delegation wished to clarify that in Ecuador there is currently not a single journalist detained. Public official media and private agencies are not stigmatized verbally or physically, nor has any equipment been confiscated. Ecuador is indeed trying to develop the work of journalists, guaranteeing the freedom of the press and the freedom of expression.

57. On the law on contempt, Ecuador noted that the present Criminal Code goes back to 1938. For this reason, it has presented to the Assembly a new integral code. This code not only includes new crimes, in accordance with present needs of Ecuadorean society, but also establishes more efficient processes. With regard to the law on contempt in the new Criminal Code, Ecuador indicated that it had eliminated this in the new legislation that is being promulgated.

58. On the issue of children of refugees, Ecuador noted that it is a pioneer and a model in terms of refugee status. Refugees do not live in Ecuador in tents or camps, and are fully integrated in the economy and the society. The country provides significant resources for the refugee population and is grateful for the assistance of the international community to UNHCR. Ecuador has been publicly recognized by UNHCR for their support and assistance to the refugee population.

59. With regard to the visit by the Special Rapporteur on freedom of express, Ecuador reiterated that it has a standing and open invitation to all international and regional special procedures mechanisms to visit the country. Ecuador has already agreed with the Rapporteur of the United Nations to visit Ecuador this year.

60. Ecuador further thanked delegations for comments made on the sovereign participation of Ecuador in the work of the Human Rights Council.

61. France welcomed Ecuador's ratification of main international human rights instruments and its standing invitation to the special procedures mechanisms. France expressed concerns regarding freedom of expression and the persistence of child labour and violence against children in Ecuador. France made recommendations.

62. Germany was pleased to note that the Ecuadorian's Constitution recognizes the indigenous peoples' rights. However, it noted that no mechanism had been adopted yet to ensure their right to be consulted. Germany also referred to issues related to freedom of expression. Germany made recommendations.

63. Guatemala recognized steps made to reduce poverty, unemployment and malnutrition. Guatemala praised Ecuador for its programmes for persons with disabilities, an assistance programme on which it had a bilateral cooperation agreement with Ecuador. Guatemala thanked Ecuador for sharing good practices in this area. Guatemala further asked how the principle of universal citizenship was defined.

64. Holy See noted the measures taken by Ecuador to protect the environment and indigenous and Afro-descendants' rights; and to combat poverty and illiteracy. It encouraged Ecuador to continue its efforts to refrain violent groups from establishing in its territory. Holy See made recommendations.

79. Nicaragua commended Ecuador for its National Plan for Good Living, and shared vision to put the citizen as a subject of rights and centre of human development. It wished to know about actions being undertaken to address inequalities in the society. Nicaragua made a recommendation.
80. In response to comments made by various delegations, Ecuador recalled that it considered the right to human development to be one of the key human rights guaranteed under government policies, at the heart of which was its successful buen vivir ('good living') plan. Its poverty-reduction policy had been successful, leading to a sharp fall in poverty between 2006 and 2011.

81. Regarding the comments made by Nicaragua, Ecuador emphasized that the inequality gap had narrowed, as recognized by ECLAC. Child labour had also been reduced and was no longer dependent on the economic cycle. Ecuador had grown accustomed to inequality, poverty and exclusion in the past, but the bien vivir plan was helping to bring a previously ignored sector of the population to the forefront of public policy.

82. Turning to universal citizenship and migration policies, the delegation noted that the 2008 Constitution recognized and protected the rights of migrants and their families. The right to migration had been established and a person with migrant status could not be deemed illegal. Less restrictive policies on human mobility had been introduced, such as allowing foreign nationals to enter the country without a visa for 90 days, with their full rights guaranteed during their stay. The State had a duty to ensure that Ecuadorians living abroad enjoyed their rights. Those living abroad for economic reasons had been a Government priority, with special institutions established to cater for the needs of Ecuadorian migrants abroad such as ensuring they received social security benefits while overseas. Meanwhile, many Ecuadorians had returned home since the economic upturn.

83. With regard to comments on prior consultation with indigenous peoples, Ecuador had adopted ILO Convention No. 169 in 2000 and the 2008 Constitution included prior consultation with indigenous peoples. The Constitution provided for indigenous communities to receive a share of development project profits and compensation where appropriate. Furthermore, the courts had stipulated how prior consultations should take place, requiring the participation of and dialogue with indigenous authorities and cultural, environmental and social impact studies to be carried out prior to oil or mining projects.

84. With respect to the comment on preventing organized violent groups from establishing themselves in Ecuador, the delegation recalled that when violent situations had arisen in neighbouring countries, Ecuador had helped those countries while taking steps to prevent such problems occurring in its country. No organized groups were carrying out violent activities in Ecuador, but when they had occasionally entered Ecuador, the Government had detained, prosecuted or returned those responsible to their countries of origin.

85. There was a misperception that many people were currently held in prison for violent social protests, but the delegation stressed that only one person, an alleged student leader, had been prosecuted, convicted and imprisoned for a violent attack on the Vice-Principal of the country's main university. The delegation said that the 1938 Criminal Code was under review since the crime of 'sabotage', as such violent acts were known under the Code, referred solely to paralysis of public services.

86. With regard to the issue raised by Hungary relating to the treatment of persons deprived of their liberty, the delegation clarified that convicted persons were always held separated from those awaiting trial.

87. As for the comments made by Mexico on police abuse, Ecuador noted that all cases of alleged violations of human rights had been brought before the Truth Commission. The police and armed forces nationwide underwent human rights training, which was a core element of police training programmes. Ecuador was also one of the first Latin American countries to regulate detention, the use of force and weapons and support for police officers.

88. Regarding the views expressed by Liechtenstein, Malaysia, Luxembourg and Morocco on the role of specialized judges in cases of violence against women and domestic violence, the Judiciary Act of 2009 had provided for judges specializing in the family, women and youth and child-friendly facilities were currently being installed in family courts.

89. Measures to transform the judiciary included a gender-based approach and parity was a consideration in the selection of judges. Moreover, the Public Defender's office ensured that women, children and victims of violence would be equally and fairly represented and defended. The draft bill presented in 2011 to reform the Criminal Code criminalized domestic violence

90. Turning to the comments made by Djibouti, the delegation highlighted that increased rights among Afro-Ecuadorians was reflected in higher school attendance rates and more enrolments in higher education.

125. On the issue of unemployment, the delegation stated that government efforts had resulted in a significant fall; indeed, Ecuador now had an overall unemployment rate of 4.2 per cent, the lowest ever recorded and at a time of global financial crisis.

126. Ecuador had launched a national plan to combat racial discrimination and in March 2012, for the first time in its history, 70 members entering to the diplomatic career, among which 21 were indigenous, 11 Afro-Ecuadorians and 10 Montubios and had been selected for the diplomatic service following a competitive examination and affirmative actions.

127. Concerning comments on gender equality and women's rights, specifically on eliminating gender-based domestic violence, the delegation reiterated that a specialized court had been established to deal with such issues and noted that measures had been adopted to provide protection and care for victims such as special hospital units. Furthermore, the Government had introduced policies to improve women's rights and opportunities at work, including the appointment of a significant number of women to decision-making positions at ministerial level and the court of justice.

128. The delegation stated that no journalists were subject to harassment or assault by the Government or other groups. Moreover, Ecuador respected the work undertaken by nongovernmental organizations, provided that they abided by the law.

129. With regard to the comments of the United States, the delegation emphasized that Ecuador not only fully respect, but promote freedom of expression and reiterated the open invitation to all, to visit our country and witness by themselves. Moreover, Ecuador respected the right to dignity and honor as enshrined in the Constitution and the American Convention on Human Rights, which Ecuador had ratified, together with some countries of the region, while others have not.

130. Referring to questions and comments on the development of education in a plurinational, intercultural State, the delegation drew attention to a new organizational act on intercultural education, which extended educational rights and introduced regulations to ensure that education should adhere to the principles of universality, freedom, participation, equality and non-discrimination. In 2010, a new organization act on higher education had also been passed, stipulating that higher education should be free for all to increase enrolment.

131. Turning to the positive comments made by Sri Lanka, the delegation added that the new Constitution adopted in 2008 had been categorized as the greenest on the planet, setting forth principles such as the rights of nature, a precautionary approach ensuring the avoidance of any actions whose impact might be uncertain, and avoiding acting purely on grounds of economic growth. Ecuador was committed to safeguarding its extensive national park areas and had decided not to exploit its oil reserves as its contribution to ensure shared responsibility for tackling the climate crisis.

132. The delegation reiterated its invitation for experts and rapporteurs to visit Ecuador to see how human rights were implemented and the extent to which facilities had been made available to all human rights defenders, for which Ecuador had been congratulated by the Special Rapporteur on the rights of human rights defenders.

133. Ecuador invited all to visit Ecuador to see what their hospitality is like and to see all their achievements.

135.34. Safeguard the family institution and matrimony as the conjugal union between a man and a woman, based on the free consent as requested by the human nature and idiosyncrasy of the Ecuadorian people (Holy See);

135.35. Set the minimum age for contracting marriage at 18 years for girls and boys (Turkey);

135.36. Continue making efforts to guarantee all Ecuadorians the right to free intercultural, diverse and participative communication in all environments and media and the right to search, receive, exchange produce and circulate truthful, verified, timely, contextualized and plural information (Peru);

135.37. Ensure that community activists and indigenous leaders can exercise their right to peaceful assembly and protest and that anti-terrorist legislation is not misused to inappropriately censure such activities (Canada);

135.38. Undertake a review of existing and proposed legislation relating to freedom of expression and media freedom to ensure its alignment with international standards, and more specifically, eliminate any existing criminal defamation provisions, also known as desacato laws (Canada); Decriminalize defamation and make the necessary amendments in this regard, in line with Inter-American and international standards (Norway); Repeal all legal provisions that contravene international norms on freedom of expression, especially all insult laws and all norms that criminalize defamation of public officials and institutions (Latvia); Align criminal legislation on insult and defamation with international standards governing freedom of expression. It hoped that these important elements would be taken into account in the ongoing reform of the Penal Code (Belgium); Guarantee in all circumstances the independence of the media and take the necessary measures in order that domestic legislation on the offense against honour and defamation does not undermine the freedom of expression (France); Respect the right to freedom of expression and peaceful demonstration, and restrict to the absolute minimum the use of criminal prosecutions against people who exercise these rights (Belgium); Consider taking measures to guarantee freedom of expression, particularly the freedom of the press and to harmonize national legislation in this area with international norms (Costa Rica); Stick to its international commitments, particularly to article 19 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (Estonia);

135.60. Take necessary measures to eradicate the tendency and/or dissemination, through mass media, of stereotypes that could lead to the discrimination of migrants and refugees (Argentina);

135.61. Continue with its policy of recognition and promotion of the rights of nature, the promotion of the use of non-pollutant or of low impact technology and alternative energies (Bolivia).

136. The recommendations below did not enjoy the support of Ecuador and which provided comments:

136.1. Reform legislation regarding freedom of expression with a view to bringing it in conformity with international standards and those of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (Switzerland);

The Ecuadorian State has signed and ratified the American Convention on Human Rights (Pact of San José), which clearly establishes the mandatory compliance of the Inter-American Court of Human Rights' decisions, granting the latter the possibility to interpret and apply the norms of the previously mentioned Convention. For that reason, respectful as we are of our international obligations, we cannot accept to reform our legal framework in accordance with standards from the Inter-American Commission of Human Rights, when it is the Court, not the Commission, which has judicial competency over this matter.

136.2. Eliminate laws that criminalize opinion and accept visit requests from the OAS and the United Nations Special Rapporteurs on Freedom of Expression (United States of America);

In Ecuador, there are no laws that "criminalize opinion". As a consequence, we cannot eliminate inexistent laws. It is important to mention that no requests from Special Rapporteurs have been denied, both from the UN and the OAS. On the contrary, Ecuador maintains standing invitations for all Special Rapporteurs.

136.3. Establish clear consultation procedures in order to implement the right to free, prior and informed consent of indigenous peoples as contained in the Constitution (Germany);

The Constitution of the Ecuadorian State establishes consultation as a right of all Ecuadorians, but particularly for communities, peoples and nationalities, a previous, free and informed consultation, but not their consent. Additionally, it is necessary to indicate that Ecuador recognizes the existence of indigenous peoples living in voluntary isolation, with the consequent obligation of guaranteeing their lives, of respecting and making others respect their self-determination and will to remain in isolation, and defend the validity of their rights, which turns unviable obtaining their consent.

137. All conclusions and/or recommendations contained in the present report reflect the position of the submitting State(s) and/or the State under review. They should not be construed as endorsed by the Working Group as a whole.

III. Voluntary pledges and commitments

138. The Ecuadorian State assumes the following voluntary commitments:

(a) Continue its efforts to implement a Human Rights Information System with support from the Office of the High Commissioner of the United Nations for Human Rights.

- (b) Share with the public sector and with civil society the recommendations and voluntary commitments product of the second Universal Periodic Review.
- (c) Share the Ecuadorian experience and provide assistance to interested countries on its programs in the field of inclusion of persons with disabilities.
