Introduction

1. The Working Group on the Universal Periodic Review (UPR), established in accordance with Human Rights Council resolution 5/1 of 18 June 2007, held its twenty-first session from 19 to 30 January 2015. The review of Armenia was held at the 8th meeting on 22 January 2015. The delegation of Armenia was headed by Mr. Ashot Hovakimian, Deputy Minister of Foreign Affairs. At its 14th meeting held on 27 January 2015, the Working Group adopted the report on Armenia
2. On 13 January 2015, the Human Rights Council selected the following group of rapporteurs (troika) to facilitate the review of Armenia: El Salvador, Indonesia and Nigeria.
3. In accordance with paragraph 15 of the annex to resolution 5/1 and paragraph 5 of the annex to resolution 16/21, the following documents were issued for the review of Armenia:
  - (a) A national report submitted/written presentation made in accordance with paragraph 15 (a) (A/HRC/WG.6/21/ARM/1);
  - (b) A compilation prepared by OHCHR in accordance with paragraph 15 (b) (A/HRC/WG.6/21/ARM/2);
  - (c) A summary prepared by OHCHR in accordance with paragraph 15 (c) (A/HRC/WG.6/21/ARM/3 and A/HRC/WG.6/21/ARM/3/Corr.1).
4. A list of questions prepared in advance by Azerbaijan, Belgium, the Czech Republic, Germany, the Netherlands, Norway, Slovenia, Spain, Switzerland and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland was transmitted to Armenia through the troika. These questions are available on the extranet of the UPR.

I. Summary of the proceedings of the review process

A. Presentation by the State under review

5. The Head of the Delegation affirmed Armenia's support for the UPR process and underlined the importance of sharing best practices. Armenia thanked all the Governments which had submitted written questions and would address them during the review.
6. Armenia's National Report outlined the key areas of reform related to human rights and the main challenges and obstacles in their implementation. The recommendations from the first cycle had received the Government's close attention. Legislative and practical measures had been adopted to implement them. Armenia had submitted a mid-term report on their implementation and was among the countries that had accepted the highest number of recommendations in the first cycle. It appreciated and stressed the interest of civil society in the process and believed that stronger human rights system could result only from the synergies between the State and the civil society. Civil society development had commenced from the first days of Armenia's independence and it had been particularly active in the last decade. Many organizations were contributing in specialized fields and carrying out studies.
7. Armenia described its main achievements since the first UPR, commencing with the 2012-2016 Strategic Program for Legal and Judicial Reforms. Its wide-ranging activities related to judicial, penitentiary and criminal legislation; the decriminalization of some activities and reducing sentences for others; the introduction of a probation system; and reducing trial lengths.

8. Armenia highlighted the 2012 National Strategy on Human Rights Protection. In 2014 a related plan of action had been approved and a Working Group had been established to coordinate its implementation. Thematic plans had been approved in many fields.

9. The Commission on Constitutional Reforms of Armenia had been formed in 2013 and the Council on Women's Issues was reorganized into a National Mechanism for implementation of gender equality policy in 2014. The Law "On Ensuring the Equal Rights and Equal Rights for Women and Men" had been adopted in 2013 and relevant policy for its monitoring and effective implementation was in process.

10. Armenia's Ombudsman was confirmed as having "A" status in 2013 and the Government had increased its budget every year, thus guaranteeing the operation of its Rapid Response Service and regional offices. Armenia had signed or ratified a number of international instruments during the review period, including the CRPD, the ICPPED and the ICRMW. Ratification of the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court may be possible when the relevant issues are addressed in the constitutional reform process.

11. The Armenian Ombudsman had been assigned the task of setting up the National Preventive Mechanism (NPM) in compliance with the OP-CAT. Since 2012 civil society representatives had been also been involved in the Council for the Prevention of Torture and collaboration with the police had resolved some specific issues. Amendments to the Criminal Code had been submitted for approval to bring national legislation criminalizing "torture" into conformity with Article 1 of the CAT.

12. The Law of Armenia "On public service" was adopted in 2011. The quality of democracy was predicated on the scale of women's civic and political participation and their involvement in decision-making. Article 108.2 of the Electoral Code represented an improvement to gender balance requirements, in particular establishment of gender sensitive quotas compared to earlier legislation. A working group had been established which had studied and offered a comprehensive action plan for the implementation of recommendations presented by OSCE-ODIHR following the 2012 Parliamentary and 2013 Presidential elections.

13. Combating corruption was one of the Armenian Government's priorities and a number of the measures had been undertaken including the Anti-Corruption Strategy and its Action Plan; cooperation with the Organization for Economic Development and the Council of Europe Group of States against corruption. GRECO had concluded that Armenia had fulfilled the 19 recommendations contained in its 2014 report. State policy also included the active participation of civil society and individuals in anti-corruption programmes.

14. The numbers of detained children had seen a steady fall in recent years and Armenia had one of the lowest numbers of children in the region. The Strategic Program for the Protection of the Rights of the Child for 2013-2016 and a timetable for the related measures were approved in December 2012. The measures include drawing up of concepts for combating violence against children.

15. The Armenian Government had paid particular attention to ensuring the freedom, independence and pluralism of the media throughout the legislative reform that had been conducted since independence, cooperating with regional organizations in this field. The development of the Internet had become one of the strategic priorities and the legislation aimed at protecting the interests of users of electronic communications services. According to international watchdogs, Armenia was considered to be a country with a free Internet. The Criminal Code had been amended in 2010 so as to decriminalize defamation.

16. Armenia's activities in anti-trafficking include public awareness campaigns and new law adopted in 2014. Governmental, non-governmental and international organizations comprised an interagency working group on the issue and Armenia was active in the relevant activities of the Council of Europe.

B. Interactive dialogue and responses by the State under review

17. During the interactive dialogue, 70 delegations made statements. Recommendations made during the dialogue are to be found in section II of the present report.

18. Kyrgyzstan noted with satisfaction that Armenia had made considerable progress towards implementing its obligations made in the previous review. It mentioned Armenia's cooperation with international organizations and commended a series of measures which the country had taken pertaining to the empowerment of women.

19. Latvia was pleased at the enactment of specific legislation on the equality between men and women, including the National Programme Against Gender-based Violence, but remained concerned at reports of violence against women and attacks against journalists.

20. Lebanon acknowledged Armenia's efforts in developing constitutional mechanisms to enhance the situation of human rights and fundamental freedoms, in combating human trafficking and protecting national minorities and multiculturalism.

21. Lithuania welcomed the National Programme for the Protection of the Rights of the Child. It stated that despite a relatively strong policy framework, gender equality persisted. Lithuania also noted that cases of violence against human rights defenders and journalists were still being reported.

22. Malaysia lauded Armenia for its extensive efforts in promoting gender equality and in combating gender violence. It also recognised the achievements made in promoting the right to education as well as the employment of persons with disabilities.

23. Mauritania welcomed the adoption of the 2011 Law on Freedom of Assemblies and the 2013 Law on Equality Opportunities for Women and Men, and the National Strategy for the Protection of Human Rights in 2013. Mauritania also noted efforts regarding women, children rights and education.

24. Mexico recognized Armenia's efforts on migration, especially the signing of the International Convention on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families, and the enactment of laws on equal opportunities between men and women, and freedom of assembly.

25. Montenegro asked if Armenia has undertaken a program of education and awareness-raising for international human rights instruments and Armenia's related obligations, and expressed concern at legislation on discrimination.

26. Morocco welcomed the adoption of the National Strategy for the Protection of Human Rights and the ratification of the International Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance, and the International Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities.

27. Namibia commended the adoption of the National Strategy for the Protection of Human Rights and its Plan of Action, and of legislation on equal opportunities between women and men.

28. The Netherlands welcomed Armenia's cooperation with the European Union on human rights issues, and progress in alternative military service. Netherlands expressed concern at incidents of violence against human rights defenders and hate speech by Government's officials and police against religious, ethnic and sexual minorities.

29. Norway welcomed the National Strategy and Action Plan for the Protection of Human Rights and underlined the need for broad participation from civil society in its implementation. It was concerned about reports of discrimination against vulnerable groups, including HIV-sufferers.

30. The Philippines recognized Armenia's efforts on combating traffic in persons, and welcomed the electoral reform aimed at increasing women representation in legislature and ratification of international instruments. It was concerned about allegations that judicial independence remains weak.

31. Poland thanked Armenia for its participation in the UPR process and mentioned the importance it attached to the rights to freedom of opinion and expression, peaceful assembly and association. It acknowledged Armenia's efforts in the legislative framework on the rights of the child.

32. Portugal welcomed the submission of a mid-term report in 2013, and the ratification of the International Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance and the International Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities. Portugal encouraged Armenia to pursue efforts towards better protection of children's rights.

33. The Republic of Korea appreciated the ratification of the International Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance and the International Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities, and efforts on improving legislation on freedom of assembly, political participation and alternative military service.

34. The Republic of Moldova welcomed the adoption of the National Strategy for the Protection of Human Rights and of thematic strategies on children's rights, human trafficking and promoting human rights education. It also noted the adoption of a law on assistance to victims of trafficking or exploitation.

35. Romania noted the National Strategy for the Protection of Human Rights and its Action Plan, ratification of CRPD and adoption of law on gender equal opportunities. It appreciated the UPR mid-term report produced in 2013. Romania was also pleased about the awareness-raising on women's rights in schools.

36. The Russian Federation positively assessed Armenia's efforts in the implementation of the National Strategy and Action Plan for the Protection of Human Rights. It noted Armenia's measures to strengthen legislation for human rights protection, reform the judicial system and ensure equality for all.

37. Rwanda commended Armenia for the programmes put in place against gender-based violence, including the strategic programme 2011-2015. It also noted Armenia's third ranking position in 2013 in anti-trafficking efforts.

38. Bosnia and Herzegovina welcomed the establishment of a national human rights institution with "A" status and the passing of and implementation of various laws on gender equality, the rights of persons with disabilities and rights of national minorities. It asked Armenia for more information on their policies to address the issue of education of children with special needs.

39. Sierra Leone urged Armenia to enforce more effectively laws on early marriages of Yazidi girls. It also called on Armenia to refrain from prosecuting asylum seekers for illegal entry and to ensure effective access to education by minorities, asylum seekers and refugees.

40. Regarding its recommendations of the first cycle, Slovenia enquired whether a national preventive mechanism under the OP-CAT had been established. It also noted with concern the persistent discriminatory practices against women and LGBT population.
41. Spain praised the initiative of submitting spontaneously a mid-term report in 2013 on the implementations of the recommendations of the first UPR cycle, but remained concerned at the persistence of gender violence and the high incidence of violence against minority groups.
42. Sweden stated that the adoption of the Human Rights Action Plan was positive, but it failed to address in full certain areas such as women and children's rights. It added that systemic problems in respect of the right to a fair trial persisted.
43. Armenia responded to questions relating to the justice system. The Draft Criminal Procedure Code contained a separate chapter regulating juvenile justice. Recent changes to the legislation included ensuring that participation of a representative for a minor would be mandatory from the moment of arrest. Further details were provided on the conditions of detention of juveniles and the applicable monitoring mechanisms which involved both the Defender and NGOs.
44. The amendments to the Criminal Code of Armenia relating to torture ensure that all public officials who engaged in torture would be charged accordingly, with possible penalties of eight years' imprisonment and exclusion from public office or the practice of certain activities for up to three years. Armenia also mentioned the specialized Investigating Department of Torture within the Special Investigation Service and an Order from the Head of the Police on applying the standards of the European Committee for the Prevention of Torture.
45. Armenia referred to the construction and, in 2015 the coming expansion, of the Armavir penitentiary to improve the conditions and solve overcrowding in places of detention. In 2011 a Government Decision had defined a timetable for the implementation of measures to improve medical services in penitentiaries.
46. Armenia amended the Law on "Alternative Service" in 2013. The new provisions distinguish "alternative military" and "alternative civilian" services which allow those whose beliefs either prevented them respectively from carrying arms or doing military service at all. Measures had been undertaken to remedy the situation for objectors who had been prosecuted before the entry into force of this law.
47. Armenia noted that the Draft Criminal Procedure Code contained measures to define detention as an exceptional measure of restraint in addressing excessive periods of pre-trial detention.
48. Armenia provided details of deaths recorded in the armed forces in 2013 and 2014 and stated that a recorded increase could be attributed to more cease-fire violations. However, there had been a reduction in the number of suicides. The Prosecutor General had been taking measures to inform the public about cases and investigations in this area and organized discussions on the issue.
49. In relation to criminal investigations following demonstrations after the 2008 Presidential elections, Armenia agreed that the investigations may have seemed slow, but the volume and scale of the case and the situation should not make this surprising. In 2014 the Prosecutor General had ordered the separation of each death into a separate criminal case in order to increase the focus on the cases.
50. Armenia noted that decisions on extradition could not be made before completion of the procedure for granting refugee status.

51. Armenia noted that there had been many cases where high-ranking officials had been convicted in the courts. It also noted that the acquittal rate had been increasing and, at 3.6 percent in 2014, it was within the normal margins for most states.

52. The delegation provided more details of the measures which had been undertaken by the Police to prevent torture, including the installation of video cameras in many police stations. Police skills were being increased and no allegations of ill-treatment had been received in recent years in relation to the custody staff in police detention facilities.

53. The police in Armenia had always exercised its functions so as to allow the realization of the right to peaceful assembly and also ensure public safety and the protection of the rights and freedoms of others. The force had been used in some cases of necessity, but in strict compliance with the law. Trainings had been organized for police officers in collaboration with international organizations on the application of legislation relating to freedom of assembly and guidelines prepared on the use of force. One of the main reforms was the introduction of community policing.

54. Switzerland was concerned about the human rights violations towards human rights defenders, journalists and representatives of the civil society. It welcomed the adoption of the law on gender equality, in accordance with the recommendation that it made in 2010.

55. Tajikistan noted the achievements of the Government of Armenia in human rights' protection and positively assessed the adoption of the National Strategy for the Protection of Human Rights. It further noted Armenia's efforts in combating trafficking in human beings.

56. Thailand welcomed the new legislation adopted to combat human trafficking and on employment for persons with disabilities. However, it expressed concern about domestic violence. Finally, Thailand encouraged Armenia to further invest in the improvement of the educational system.

57. Turkey was concerned about restrictions on freedom of expression on the issue of genocide and considered that the events of 1915 constituted a legitimate subject of debate. It clarified that the allegations of a blockade mentioned in Armenia's National Report were baseless.

58. The United Arab Emirates welcomed the recent measures taken to reform the Constitution which had improved the constitutional human rights mechanisms. It asked Armenia to provide further information about the Decree NH-207-N on constitutional reforms.

59. The United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland welcomed Armenia's progress since the last review and the roadmap provided by the Human Rights Strategy and Action Plan. It noted concerns raised in the OSCE report on the 2013 Presidential elections.

60. The United States of America commended improvement in respecting freedom of expression manifested in the Human Rights Defender's 2013 report, but noted that more needed to be done. It was seriously concerned about systemic corruption and the absence of an independent judiciary.

61. Uruguay underlined Armenia's efforts to guarantee equal opportunities and non-discrimination, including steps to increase women's representation in the legislative power, and the adoption of the National Plan for the Protection of the Rights of the Child 2013-2016.

62. The Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela was pleased by the ratification of the International Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance and the International Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities, and the starting of the National Strategy for the Protection of Human Rights in 2012 followed by its Plan of Action in 2014.

63. While appreciating the support given to the functioning of the Human Rights Defender and the implementation of the National Strategy for the Protection of Human Rights, Albania encouraged Armenia to increase resources for the functioning of all mechanisms for the protection of human rights.

64. Algeria welcomed the adoption of the Human Rights Action Plan and the strengthening of the legal framework in the area of human rights. It also encouraged Armenia to pursue the measures taken to promote the education and culture of national minorities.

65. Angola commended Armenia for the establishment of the 2012-2016 Strategic Program for Legal and Judicial Reforms and welcomed the initiatives undertaken to ensure gender equality, including the drafting of the Strategic Programme and its Action Plan.

66. Argentina welcomed the ratifications of CPED and CRPD and noted the progresses undertaken through the National Strategy for the Protection of Human Rights and its Action Plan. However, it stated that discrimination against women and LGBT persons persist.

67. Australia asked to receive a written update on the implementation of the National Strategy for the Protection of Human Rights. It welcomed the progress in implementing CAT and the adoption of the law on gender equality. However, Australia remained concerned about gender-based discrimination and the failure to protect LGBTI persons.

68. Austria remained concerned about the persistence of gender-based discrimination and discrimination against persons with disabilities and LGBT persons. It also expressed concern that effective enjoyment of the right to education was still not guaranteed for all children.

69. Azerbaijan pointed out that in accordance with General Assembly Resolution 62/243, the term “Nagorno-Karabakh” in Armenia’s National report should be read as “the Nagorno-Karabakh region of the Republic of Azerbaijan”.

70. Armenia stated that the Government condemned all forms of discrimination, and the relevant national legislation included its criminalization. All national programs adopted by Armenia in the field of human rights are the basic components of the national anti-discrimination policy the main goal of which is to ensure monitoring the effective implementation of national legislation as well as incorporation of international obligations in national policies. Armenia had joined most of the United Nations and regional instruments relating to equality. It provided more details of the plans and strategies related to non-discrimination and highlighted more of the relevant actions including the submission of its latest periodic report to the Committee on the Elimination of all Forms of Discrimination against Women and the inclusion of a plan for the adoption of a separate law on discrimination within the Plan of Action for the National Strategy for Human Rights Protection.

71. Referring to some of the specific groups, Armenia noted that there were no restrictions on access to public services for sexual minorities. Concerned by the fact that representatives of some women’s NGOs had been intimidated on the social media, the Women’s Council, which was chaired by the Prime Minister, had advocated an end to such behaviour and urged the law enforcement bodies to be more vigilant in the prevention and punishment of such cases. A number of legal and institutional measures had been taken to strengthen the protection of members of national minorities since the first UPR and the budget allocated to national minorities had been doubled since 2012.

72. Armenia listed some of the measures which had been taken for members of national minorities lacking their own kin state. These included the publishing and provision of free school textbooks in their languages. The incorporation of these minorities was seen as an asset to Armenia's culture. The preservation and development of the culture of national minorities was a priority and all historical and architectural monuments, cultural and religious buildings were under state protection, regardless of their ethnic or religious associations.
73. Armenia cooperated closely with the Council of Europe's European Commission against Racism and Intolerance and the delegation provided details of the findings of the commission's latest monitoring report.
74. The adequate legislative framework had been established to ensure the appropriate conditions for religious diversity. As of 2014, 66 religious organizations were registered of which 9 belonged to national minorities.
75. Management of migration was among Armenian Government priorities. The 2014 action plan included activities to harmonize national legislation with international standards. The 2014 amendments to the Criminal Code had made organizing illegal immigration a criminal offence. Under the new anti-trafficking law, victims of human trafficking could be granted a residence permit.
76. An asylum system was fully functional and over 16,000 refugees from Syria had arrived in recent years. A new Draft Law on Asylum had recently been developed together with the support of UNHCR and submitted to the Government.
77. Belarus noted with satisfaction the legislative measures undertaken by Armenia since the first UPR. In particular, it noted legislation on gender equality. It welcomed the attention given to the most vulnerable groups in the National Strategy for the Protection of Human Rights.
78. While welcoming the ratification of ICPPED and CRPD, Belgium stated that there was still a lot to do in terms of human rights, including violence against women and children and abuses committed by police forces.
79. Benin welcomed Armenia's efforts towards the implementation of the recommendations from the first UPR and Armenia's ratification of ICPPED and CRPD.
80. Serbia applauded Armenia for the adoption of the National Strategy for the Protection of Human Rights and its Action Plan and considered that Armenia had taken decisive steps in combating domestic violence.
81. Brazil commended Armenia for implementing its first cycle recommendations. It was concerned about violence against women and urged Armenia to protect LGBTI persons. It underlined the importance of aligning the definition of torture with international standards, ensure adequate resources for its national prevention mechanism, and promote awareness-raising on HIV/AIDS.
82. Bulgaria appreciated the approval of the Strategic Program for Legal and Judicial Reforms, the National Strategy for the Protection of Human Rights and its Action Plan, and welcomed policies and programs on gender, gender-based violence and children. It encouraged Armenia to identify children in vulnerable situations.
83. Canada enquired about the measures undertaken to implement their recommendations from 2010 on freedom of opinion and expression and investigative journalism. It welcomed the steps taken to address racism and xenophobia and called on Armenia to investigate the incidents in Yerevan and bring perpetrators to justice.

84. The Central African Republic noted Armenia's efforts to follow up recommendations from the first cycle. It noted significant progress in the protection of persons with disabilities, freedom of assembly and equal opportunities for men and women.

85. Chad was pleased to note that Armenia presented a mid-term report. It noted that Armenia has a legislative and regulative framework in place to guarantee freedom of assembly, judicial reforms, gender equality and equal opportunities for persons with disabilities.

86. Chile thanked Armenia for its national report and welcomed the progress made in fighting corruption and human trafficking. It urged Armenia to undertake greater efforts to promote compliance with international human rights instruments.

87. Costa Rica noted Armenia's ratification of human rights treaties and welcomed the Human Rights Ombudsman's Office, the Strategic Programme for Judicial Reforms and the efforts made towards gender equality. It was concerned by allegations of restrictions on the freedom of expression, association and peaceful assembly.

88. Cuba noted the measures taken to advance gender equality and improve the protection of persons with disabilities. It also noted progress in the protection of the rights of the child, education and health.

89. Cyprus commended the measures undertaken by Armenia to promote women's and children's rights, and the initiatives undertaken to raise awareness regarding the issue of prevention and punishment of the crime of genocide.

90. The Czech Republic welcomed the delegation of Armenia. It appreciated the information provided on the implementation of previous UPR recommendations.

91. Djibouti applauded the progress made in the sphere of economic and social rights. It appreciated the efforts made for the promotion and protection of the rights of women by setting quotas to increase their representation within the legislature.

92. Egypt commended the establishment of a National Commission on constitutional reforms, the national strategy and action plan on protection of human rights, the strengthening of the judiciary and the enhanced representation of women. It welcomed the ratification of CRPD and the signature of ICRMW.

93. Armenia referred to reforms aimed at regulating and providing stable employment, particularly for those who lacked competitive skills. A five-year strategy had been approved by the Government in 2013 and a new Law on Employment entered into force in 2014. The new law included quotas for the employment of persons with disabilities in larger organizations and this would apply progressively from 2015. The minimum wage had been increased and would be raised further in 2015. Programmes for the support to small businesses and for the support to women at risk of unemployment had been created.

94. Armenia noted the submission to the National Assembly of the draft Law on the Rights and Social Inclusion of Persons with Disabilities. Armenia had ratified the CRPD; consideration could be given to accession to its Optional Protocol after reforms have been implemented.

95. Violence was punishable in law regardless of the sex of the victim and this applied to domestic violence. The draft Law on Domestic Violence had not been enacted because major reforms were being carried out to the legal system and legislation on domestic violence will be carried out on the basis of these reforms. However, the definition of domestic violence and provisions for the support of victims had been incorporated into the Law on Social Support adopted in December 2014.

96. Armenia detailed reforms to child protection, including early prevention measures, which were developed with UNICEF support. Mechanisms to improve adoption procedures were being prepared. Since 2010 the Government had adopted programmes for creating social housing for disadvantaged people and this included young people emerging from children homes.

97. Turning to health issues, Armenia outlined reforms aimed at increasing access to and increasing the quality of health services with an emphasis on prevention and early detection of diseases. Maternal and child health was on target to realize the relevant MDGs. Steps had been undertaken to reduce the risks of corruption and combat informal payments including by raising public awareness of the right to free healthcare and dismissing offending staff. Work had been undertaken address intolerance towards HIV/AIDS sufferers, including in schools.

98. Armenia disagreed with assertions that women were discriminated against in access to healthcare: more than 30 percent of the budget was devoted to programmes for support to mothers and children. Armenia was one of the few countries where 15-year-old girls received a comprehensive assessment of their development and reproductive health.

99. Armenia detailed Government's measures in ensuring equal access to education, especially for vulnerable groups. In 2014 the National Assembly adopted the new Law on General Education under which there will be a move to completely inclusive education by 2022. Inclusive education had been incorporated in 10 per cent of schools. In higher education the Government would continue to improve access for youth from vulnerable groups. In 2014 the categories of persons eligible to receive stipends had been widened.

100. Armenia provided details of the awards of licences for digital television broadcasting. Monitoring of the general elections in 2012 and municipal elections in 2013 had shown that the opposition parties had received the greater part of air-time in practically all transmissions. In relation to the case of A1+ Television, Armenia had fully fulfilled all the demands of the European Court of Human Rights and A1+ had returned to broadcast in 2012 in a new form.

101. Equatorial Guinea commended Armenia's voluntary commitments. It welcomed strategies and plans of action to protect and enhance human rights, and mentioned the measures taken for persons with disabilities and to preserve and protect the popular traditions of minorities.

102. Estonia welcomed the ratification of CRPD and commended the adoption of the Action Plan for the National Strategy on Human Rights. It invited Armenia to pay attention to violence against women. It highlighted its development cooperation with Armenia.

103. Finland commended Armenia for increasing the funding of the Human Rights Defender and was pleased to note that the increased budget had resulted in the continued operation of its rapid response service and some of its local offices.

104. France welcomed the progress made since the first cycle. It welcomed the adoption of a comprehensive program for judicial reform for the period 2012-2016 and enquired about the status of this programme.

105. Germany commended Armenia's progress in some areas and in trafficking in persons in particular. It noted that the 2012 Parliamentary and 2013 Presidential elections were on the whole better administered than previous elections although a number of irregularities were observed.

106. Greece highlighted progress in different areas, in particular in the promotion of gender equality; fight against human trafficking and protection of children.

107. Indonesia welcomed the formulation of the National Strategy for the Protection of Human Rights and its Action Plan as well as the Armenian's decision to sign the ICRMW.

108. The Islamic Republic of Iran was convinced that the efforts made in addressing the scourge of human trafficking and domestic violence would result in a better protection of the rights of women and children. It also commended Armenia for the special attention paid to the improvement of children's rights.

109. Ireland was pleased that a number of special procedures mandate holders had been invited in Armenia and that the national human rights institution retained "A" status. It noted that concerns had been expressed at the hindrances to the exercise of the right to freedom of assembly and expression.

110. Italy welcomed the ratification of numerous human rights instrument and the measures taken to promote women's rights and gender equality. It also encouraged Armenia to ensure that civil society organisations were effectively consulted on reform proposals that might affect their activities.

111. Kazakhstan welcomed the ratification of ICPED and CRPD and noted with satisfaction the progress achieved in the area of the fight against trafficking and measures undertaken towards a better gender equality.

112. Noting the efforts undertaken in the field of education and fight against human trafficking, Kuwait called on Armenia to continue its efforts in these areas. It also welcomed the ratification of ICPED and CRPD.

113. China appreciated Armenia's efforts in combating violence against women and human trafficking, protecting the rights of people with disabilities, developing education and culture for minorities, ensuring children's welfare and realising the right to education for children with special needs.

114. In his closing remarks the Head of the Delegation of Armenia highlighted the country's priority in protecting the rights of racial, religious, ethnic and national minorities. Most essential of these rights was the right to life of these groups, as protected in the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of Genocide. Resolute, timely acknowledgement, absolute rejection and condemnation, assessment and monitoring could prevent genocide. Therefore the issue of prevention of genocide has a specific importance for Armenia. Armenia initiated resolutions related to the Convention for the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide. The latest Resolution 22/22 was adopted by consensus at the 22nd session of the UN HRC.

115. Armenia considered that the duty of memory and remembrance empowered by the realisation of the right to the truth was important dimension of genocide prevention. Armenia underlined that denying, trivializing, condoning or justifying past genocides infringe upon human rights of victims of genocide and regretted that the Turkish delegation had used the opportunity for dialogue with Armenia to reaffirm its policy of denial.

116. Armenia disagreed with the attitude of putting equivalence between the victim and the perpetrator and called upon Turkey to face its own history, thus relieving the next generations of the heavy burden of the past.

117. Armenia valued the protection and promotion of political, social and cultural rights of people. Armenia outlined the value it attached to the United Nations human rights covenants and the empowerment of people with the right to self-determination. The violent suppression of this right was a cause of many conflicts and its realization was an essential for conflict resolution. Armenia has been supporting the right of peoples to self-determination, particularly in cases where physical survival of people was at stake and will continue it including in the framework of negotiations under the auspices of OSCE Minsk

Group Co-Chairs, recalling that all OSCE members accepted that the right to self-determination of people should be among key principles of conflict resolution in OSCE 2009 Ministerial Council statement.

118. Armenia had always believed that the UPR could strengthen cooperation and avoid confrontations. It was true that, to a certain extent, conflicts could impede the realization of certain human rights, but it was also true that improvements to human rights protection could contribute to conflict resolution. Armenia had never tried to justify setbacks by invoking conflict situations. It recalled that it had accepted a large number of recommendations at the first UPR from one particular neighbouring state, but that goodwill had not been appreciated and at the second UPR the same state had rejected Armenia's recommendations. Armenia reminded the meeting that the National Report was its own and it naturally expressed the Government's official position on each issue, including on historic issues and geographical names.

119. Armenia demonstrated its readiness to engage in human rights cooperation with all countries, highly valuing the UPR. Armenia thanked the member states for their encouragement, constructive and useful dialogue and recommendations. Armenia would incorporate the outcome of the review into the systematic protection of human rights in the country.
