Introduction

1. The Working Group on the Universal Periodic Review, established in accordance with Human Rights Council resolution 5/1, held its twenty-seventh session from 1 to 12 May 2017. The review of Poland was held at the 13th meeting, on 9 May 2017. The delegation of Poland was headed by the Under-Secretary of State and Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Renata Szczech. At its 17th meeting, held on 11 May 2017, the Working Group adopted the report on Poland.

2. On 13 February 2017, the Human Rights Council selected the following group of rapporteurs (troika) to facilitate the review of Poland: Hungary, India and Venezuela (Bolivarian Republic of).

3. In accordance with paragraph 15 of the annex to Human Rights Council resolution 5/1 and paragraph 5 of the annex to Council resolution 16/21, the following documents were issued for the review of Poland:

(a) A national report submitted/written presentation made in accordance with paragraph 15 (a) (A/HRC/WG.6/27/POL/1);

(b) A compilation prepared by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) in accordance with paragraph 15 (b) (A/HRC/WG.6/27/POL/2);

(c) A summary prepared by OHCHR in accordance with paragraph 15 (c) (A/HRC/WG.6/27/POL/3).

4. A list of questions prepared in advance by Belgium, Czechia, Germany, Mexico, the Netherlands, Norway, Sweden, Slovenia, Spain, Switzerland, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the United States of America was transmitted to Poland through the troika. These questions are available on the extranet of the universal periodic review.

I. Summary of the proceedings of the review process

A. Presentation by the State under review

5. Poland, a candidate for the 2020-2022 term of the Human Rights Council, considered human rights to be an issue of utmost importance. Since 2001, Poland had cooperated fully with all special procedures and continued to extend to them a standing invitation to visit Poland at their convenience.

6. The national report of Poland had been drafted by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs on the basis of contributions from various governmental agencies responsible for fulfilling human rights-related obligations domestically. In drafting the report, Poland had strived to make the entire process as transparent as possible, duly notifying members of parliament of its course and organizing an information meeting with representatives of non-governmental organizations (NGOs) to listen to any comments and concerns. Contributions had also been received from the Ombudsman (Human Rights Commissioner) and the Ombudsman for Children.

7. Since the previous review, in 2012, Poland had signed and ratified a number of international conventions.

8. Poland was particularly concerned with protecting children's rights. In 2015, major amendments had been made to the Polish Family and Guardianship Code, elevating the protection of children. Those changes had served to eliminate automatic decisions that limit the custody rights of a parent during divorce or separation, and replace them with the child's guaranteed right to both parents. As such, decisions to restrict parental custody rights were taken only in extreme circumstances.

9. The “Family 500+” programme had been introduced in 2016 to improve children’s living conditions, in particular those who were most deprived, and to provide for the disbursement of parental monthly benefits of approximately 500 zlotys (approximately $125) for the second and each consecutive child in the family, household income notwithstanding, and for the first child for families with a household income below a certain threshold. The programme, which delivered funds to 3.8 million children in 2.56 million families, had lowered the relative poverty threat index by 4 per cent and the overall poverty threat in the community of children under 17 by 50 per cent.

10. Poland considered protecting vulnerable groups, persons with disabilities, to be of particular importance, hence why the Council of Ministers had adopted a resolution in December 2016 concerning the so-called “For Life” programme of comprehensive support for families. The programme assisted families that included persons with disabilities, especially parents raising children with disabilities. It included solutions for assisting pregnant women and their families, early assistance for children and their families and support, rehabilitation and residential aid. Work was in progress to draft a strategy for disabled persons for the period 2017-2030, to provide comprehensive support to such persons at every stage of life.

11. Poland had successfully implemented a number of recommendations submitted during the 2012 review cycle.

12. The Under-Secretary of State thanked all the States that had submitted advance questions and responded to some of them.

13. In response to the questions raised by Mexico and the United Kingdom on securing women’s rights, she stated that, between 2013 and 2016, Poland had implemented the National Programme of Activities for Equal Treatment. This was a comprehensive governmental strategy comprising action to support persons who had been discriminated against or threatened with discrimination. Many initiatives within the Programme aimed to improve the well-being of women and tackle the problems they faced. A decision had already been made to continue the Programme in the years to come. The new edition was expected to be finalized in the fourth quarter of 2017.

14. Concerning the question by Sweden on criminalizing hate speech related to gender identity, sexual orientation or disability, it was reported that courts in Poland took into account the perpetrator’s motivation when determining the type and level of penalty. Pursuant to article 53 (2) of the Criminal Code, this included gender identity, sexual orientation and disabilities.

15. Article 53 applied to all acts criminalized under the Code, such as causing bodily harm or defamation. The provision in question was of a general nature and did not limit the type of motivation that had to be taken into account by the courts. Article 212 included provisions that criminalized the slander of a person or a group of persons in relation to conduct or traits that might discredit him/her/them in the face of public opinion, or result in a loss of confidence necessary to engage in certain activities. Those provisions also applied to slander on the grounds of gender identity, sexual orientation and disabilities.

16. Regarding the so-called secret prisons of the United States Central Intelligence Agency, numerous requests for international legal assistance had been filed and plenipotentiaries of victims had been provided with access to case files, although the status of part of the ongoing investigation was classified. The plenipotentiaries participated in selected proceedings and exercised the rights of the victims. In addition, the Polish authorities were actively seeking to obtain appropriate diplomatic assurances from the United States authorities for the applicants.

17. In response to the question by Switzerland concerning media freedom, the National Media Council Law of 22 June 2016 had appointed the National Media Council as an authority responsible for supervising public media activities. The Law altered the form of managing public media, excluding any government influence over the media or their activities. Under the Law, the management boards and supervisory councils of all public radio and television companies and of the Polish Press Agency were to be appointed by the National Media Council. The Council comprised five members: three appointed by the Sejm (lower house of parliament) and two by the President from among candidates proposed by the opposition. Since initiating its activities, the Council had held open and transparent competitions to select presidents of Polish television and radio.

18. The United States raised a question on the criminalization of the use of the phrase “Polish death camps” and the passing of a law for the restitution of private property to individuals. On the criminalization of the phrase, the text of the proposed law included that the illicit act should not be considered a crime if committed within the expression of artistic or scientific activity. Freedom of research and artistic activity was thus explicitly protected under the proposed law. Moreover, criminalization would apply only to claims that were strictly “contrary to historical facts”.

19. Similar provisions already existed under the same law, providing for the criminalization of the denial of Nazi German crimes. In that case, freedom of expression was already constricted to a certain extent, for the sake of combating Holocaust denial. That would be extended to encompass ascribing responsibility for the Nazi German crimes to the Polish nation or State. However, the amendments were still proposals and not yet law, and as such might be subject to change.

20. Despite no existing specific law on the subject, the restitution of private property had been under way in Poland for over two decades. The existing legal system in Poland made it clear that any legal or natural person or their heir was entitled to recover pre-war property that had been seized unlawfully by either the Nazi German or the Soviet occupation authorities or by the post-war communist regime. Claimants might proceed through court and administrative procedures. The Polish legal system contained ample provisions that enabled owners or their heirs to claim such property. The relevant legal acts included the Civil Code, the Code of Administrative Procedure and the Law on the Management of Property.

21. According to court or administrative procedures, damages could be paid out of the reprivatization fund administered by the Ministry of Development. From the date it was set up in 2001 until October 2016, the Fund had paid out damages totalling 2.3 billion zlotys to 4,792 natural and 77 legal persons. That sum included damages paid to persons claiming enterprises to which property had not been returned in kind.

22. The delegation of Poland looked forward to a fruitful dialogue with all and would listen to their comments and recommendations and try to respond to all of them.

B. Interactive dialogue and responses by the State under review

23. During the interactive dialogue, 72 delegations made statements. Recommendations made during the dialogue are to be found in section II of the present report.

24. Serbia encouraged Poland to continue to advance the human rights infrastructure and devote particular attention to strengthening independent and oversight institutions. It noted that fighting all forms of slavery remained a challenge.

25. Sierra Leone commended Poland for updating its national legislation on the rights of migrants and human trafficking and encouraged it to address the rights of Roma peoples and asylum seekers.

26. Latvia noted the concerns regarding the lack of adequate protection mechanisms for victims of domestic violence. It asked about measures envisaged to ensure independent broadcasting of the public television and radio services.

27. South Africa welcomed legislation towards a total ban on corporal punishment and the ratification of the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities and the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on communications procedure.

28. Spain commended the ratification of the Convention on Preventing and Combating Violence against Women and Domestic Violence (the Istanbul Convention). It encouraged Poland to continue to ratify international human rights treaties.

29. Sri Lanka encouraged Poland to establish a multi-stakeholder institution against discrimination. It requested Poland to share experiences and challenges in increasing conviction rates on human trafficking cases.
30. The State of Palestine welcomed the steps taken with regard to business and human rights, including the work on a draft national plan to implement the Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights.
31. Sweden recognized the decrease in poverty levels due to a new child benefit programme to reduce poverty among children and their families, together with increased minimum salaries, and a programme to promote affordable housing.
32. Switzerland noted with satisfaction of the ratification of several instruments and the introduction of measures aiming at financially supporting families with children, hence contributing to reducing poverty.
33. Timor-Leste commended the actions of Poland towards including civil society in the review process, in particular the appointment of the Government Plenipotentiary for Civic Society and amendments to the Criminal Code to define and penalize human trafficking.
34. Turkey welcomed the efforts undertaken through humanitarian aid programmes for refugees and inquired about measures to remedy the situation of children belonging to religious minorities not being offered classes in their own religion.
35. Ukraine commended the priorities outlined in the national report of Poland, in particular those related to combating racial discrimination and xenophobia at various levels of the Government and society.
36. The United Kingdom acknowledged the efforts by Poland in the areas of women's rights, modern slavery, violence against children, access to justice, police misconduct and rights of persons with disabilities.
37. The United States remained deeply concerned about judicial independence. It urged Poland to respect fully the principles of judicial independence, checks and balances and the separation of powers between branches of government.
38. Uruguay encouraged Poland to ratify the International Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance, including recognition of its Committee. It welcomed measures to combat violence against women and the reporting record of Poland to treaty bodies.
39. Albania commended the continuing commitment aiming to put in place an effective cooperation mechanism within the public administration with respect to the principle of equal treatment.
40. Algeria congratulated Poland for the progress made, including in the context of the National Action Programme for Equal Treatment and in enhancing the rights of persons with disabilities.
41. Andorra welcomed the signature of the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on a communications procedure and the measures taken by the Ombudsman for the Rights of the Child to promote and protect children's rights.
42. Angola noted the ratification of human rights instruments and congratulated Poland on its efforts to respect the rights of women through the implementation of the National Action Programme for Equal Treatment.
43. Argentina congratulated Poland for the ratification of the Second Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, aiming at the abolition of the death penalty and took note of the part of the national report devoted to the fight against racism.
44. Armenia commended the steps taken to combat hate crime and incitement to hatred, in particular defining liability for incitement or public glorification of extermination of a national, ethnic, racial and religious group.

45. Australia was concerned that women in Poland faced difficulties in gaining access to safe and legal abortion. It was also concerned about rising hate speech and hate crimes, including incidents against immigrants.
46. Austria commended the ratification by Poland of the Istanbul Convention but remained concerned about the lack of effective legislation against discrimination and hate crimes.
47. Bangladesh appreciated initiatives to combat discrimination against women and the sexual exploitation of children and to enhance women's participation in political and public life, and commended institutional changes in relation to the equality of treatment.
48. Belarus appreciated the improvement of the methodology to identify the victims of human trafficking but shared the concern of UNHCR regarding a sharp increase in xenophobic and discriminatory attitudes towards asylum seekers.
49. Belgium acknowledged the positive measures taken to implement previous recommendations, while noting a room for progress. It mentioned concerns raised within the International Holocaust Remembrance Alliance regarding a draft law concerning the memory of the Holocaust.
50. Bosnia and Herzegovina noted the activities regarding children's rights, including the ratification of the Council of Europe Convention on the Protection of Children against Sexual Exploitation and Sexual Abuse.
51. Botswana appreciated the ratification by Poland of several international conventions but was concerned about the continued prevalence of racial discrimination targeting persons of African, Arab or Asian descent, including refugees and asylum seekers.
52. Brazil was concerned about the counter-terrorism law that might affect the right to privacy. It welcomed the efforts towards poverty reduction among children and inquired about re-establishment of an institution to prevent racial discrimination and xenophobia.
53. The delegation of Poland emphasized that Polish law observed the separation of powers and the independence of the judiciary. The National Judicial Council was not part of the judiciary and did not deal with individual cases. Furthermore, it was not a disciplinary body and did not decide on any accountability or sanctions against judges. It was a body that proposed to the President the candidates for judges. The draft law on the National Council of Judiciary did not change the power of the Council.
54. Regarding children, the Ombudsman for Children's Rights was a constitutional body; a unique act of parliament had been passed on the treatment of children; criminal penalties were not applied to them; family courts could only adopt measures to influence their behaviour; and in 2012 Poland had amended the Family and Guardianship Code to prohibit corporal punishment within the family.
55. Freedom of expression was guaranteed in the Constitution, and the European Court of Human Rights had not identified violations of freedom of expression as systemic problems in Poland. The Government relied on a 2006 judgment of the Constitutional Tribunal that had invoked, inter alia, article 17 of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and had stated that the criminal accountability for defamation was an indispensable measure for the protection of the honour and good name of other people.
56. The Government had taken extensive steps to reduce the length of court proceedings, including by introducing a "managerial manner" that included training judges, reforming court procedures and passing an act on complaints against undue delays of court proceedings.
57. Concerning the legal protection granted to vulnerable groups, such as lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and intersex persons and persons with disabilities, anti-discrimination provisions should be considered as a system. Relevant provisions in the Civil Code guaranteed broad protection of personal goods. Provisions to protect such groups were contained in the Criminal Code and other regulations, as well as in the Act implementing certain European Union legislation on equal treatment.

58. Concerning the development of civil society, the establishment of the office of the Government Plenipotentiary for Civic Society was in progress. There were a number of civic dialogue channels at the national, regional and local levels.

59. The Ministry of the Interior and Administration collected data on hate crimes cases against lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender persons. In 2015, a new system had been introduced to record all hate crime investigations led by the police, including the investigations of crimes motivated by sexual orientation or gender identity. As for anti-Muslim and anti-Semitic hate speech, the Government condemned all such incidents. All cases of hate speech constituting a crime were subjected to criminal liability according to the Criminal Code and subjected to the criminal proceedings.

60. According to the Constitution and family law, including the regulation on recording marital relationships, civil partnerships, including same-sex relationships, could not be registered.

61. Every foreigner who wanted to enter Poland without fulfilling the necessary conditions was subject to an individual assessment in terms of his or her reasons for entering and non-refoulement. Every asylum seeker could therefore apply for international protection.

62. Regarding protection of the right to privacy in the context of secret surveillance and antiterrorist legislation, the Police Act — adopted in compliance with the judgment of the Constitutional Tribunal — had improved procedural standards for conducting secret surveillance and had introduced a new control mechanism for data retention, whereby supervision was conducted by independent courts. As for the Anti-Terrorism Act, the right to privacy was guaranteed under the supervision of the Prosecutor General and, to a certain extent, by independent courts.

63. Concerning accessibility to abortions, the Act on Family Planning, Protection of the Human Foetus and Conditions of Admissibility of Abortion set specifically conditions under which abortion was possible and the time frame. Individuals covered by social security were eligible for free abortion treatment in medical establishments listed as providing guaranteed services. The Act on the Rights of Patients and the Commissioner for Patients' Rights protected the rights of women who had been refused an abortion under the circumstances laid down in the Act to raise objections to the decision of a doctor. Contraceptives were available, some of which were reimbursed by the State. A clause in the Act on the Professions of Doctor and Dentist allowed a doctor to refrain from providing certain health-care services for reasons of conscience. However, that did not affect the patient's right to obtain such health-care services.

64. In total, 777 institutions and 612 call centres provided assistance to the victims of domestic violence. Domestic violence policies had been implemented through a programme covering the period 2014-2020.

65. Poland had been working on strategies for persons with disabilities, covering all areas of the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities, with an emphasis on health, education, accessibility and employment.

66. Concerning the situation of women in the labour market, there was equality of treatment in line with European Union standards. The gender pay gap in Poland was among the lowest in the European Union and was being further reduced.

67. Poland had chosen to merge the functions of the Prosecutor General and the Minister of Justice in conformity with the acceptable international standards. Furthermore, despite the merge, the 2016 Law on Prosecution had provided explicitly for the independence of the prosecution services.

68. There were no obstacles preventing the Constitutional Tribunal from carrying out its duties. The acts that had been adopted and initiated by Parliament at the end of 2016 were in line with European standards for the functioning of a constitutional court. Those laws regulated matters relating to the system and functioning of the Constitutional Tribunal, taking into account a number of recommendations issued by the European Commission for Democracy through Law (the Venice Commission).

69. Bulgaria appreciated that further work was under consideration to enhance mass media plurality and broaden access to different forms of media, to strengthen freedom of expression and freedom of the media as key principles in the Constitution.
70. Canada urged Poland to take further measures to enhance the scope of protection of lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and intersex persons and to prevent acts of discrimination.
71. Chile welcomed measures, including legislative reforms, to combat gender violence, but was concerned about the implementation of the reforms to the Constitutional Court and the increase in xenophobia, racism and discrimination.
72. China noted that some children in rural areas did not have equal access to high-quality education and that Poland still faced challenges in guaranteeing the rights of women and national minorities.
73. Côte d'Ivoire urged Poland to strengthen further its legal framework to ensure the full enjoyment of human rights in the country, notably for minorities, migrants and asylum seekers.
74. Croatia commended the improvement of criminal legislation as regards sexual offences and the protection of child victims. It welcomed the appointment of the equal treatment coordinators and the adoption of the Programme of Roma Integration.
75. Cyprus welcomed the measures taken to enhance the protection of the rights of minority groups and encouraged Poland to continue its efforts to eliminate domestic violence and combat racism, xenophobia and hate crimes.
76. Czechia welcomed the ratification of the Second Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, aiming at the abolition of the death penalty and the signature of two other international human rights instruments.
77. Denmark attached importance to the successful completion of the dialogue between Poland and the European Commission within the rule of law procedures and the concerns raised by the Venice Commission and the Council of Europe on the rule of law.
78. Egypt commended Poland for the legislative amendments it had made to fight violence against women, the reduction in the wage gap between men and women and the efforts to protect and support women.
79. Estonia encouraged Poland to continue its work to eliminate the use of corporal punishment in various places, consider further actions to prevent and eliminate violence against women and ensure favourable legislation towards women's rights.
80. Finland encouraged Poland to take steps towards making positive progress regarding combating discrimination and ensuring full participation of civil society and to strengthen the rights of all individuals, including minorities.
81. France welcomed the ratification of the Second Optional Protocol to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, aiming at the abolition of the death penalty and of the Istanbul Convention.
82. Georgia appreciated the ratification of various international treaties and measures to improve prison conditions. It welcomed the submission of a midterm implementation report and encouraged Poland to continue that practice.
83. Germany welcomed the accession by Poland to several international human rights instruments, but remained concerned about controversial legislation regarding the judicial system and the media.
84. Greece welcomed, inter alia, the appointment of equal treatment coordinators in each ministry and in the Prime Minister's Chancellery, and the establishment of a national prevention system against torture.
85. Guatemala was concerned about reports of the lack of consistency in the actions of the border police and lack of mechanisms to identify vulnerable persons.

86. Haiti welcomed the success of the policies and programmes of Poland regarding improving women's rights, reducing poverty levels, the ratification of the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities and combating human trafficking.
87. The Holy See noted the initiatives to reduce the wage gap between men and women, enhance the protection of women and provide assistance to children for their equitable access to quality health care and education.
88. Honduras welcomed legislative measures to protect human rights and efforts to allocate the necessary funds to OHCHR. It noted, however, that Poland should continue to harmonize the legal framework with the international treaties.
89. Hungary welcomed the new laws relating to citizenship adopted to reduce statelessness and took positive note of the measures taken to promote the protection of the Roma community.
90. Iceland regretted that lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and intersex persons were still not sufficiently protected under national law and was concerned about the difficulties women faced in gaining access to safe abortions and the related law before Parliament.
91. Indonesia welcomed the implementation of the National Action Programme for Equal Treatment and the adoption of the new National Action Plan to Combat Human Trafficking and the new Foreigners Act.
92. The delegation of Poland indicated that the National Action Plan against Human Trafficking 2016-2018 had provided a series of activities to improve the identification of victims of human trafficking. Poland also had a system of social assistance, support and care for victims of human trafficking. The 2007 amendment to the Act on Social Assistance had expanded the group of beneficiaries to third-country nationals who legalized their stay in Poland by the fact of having been granted the status of victim of trafficking in human beings.
93. Children of migrants in an irregular situation and children of asylum seekers had access to education, both in open and closed centres. While it emphasized alternatives to detention, Poland did its best to improve the conditions in detention centres using European funds. For example, bars from all the windows of such centres were being taken away so that they would not have the appearance of a prison. For the integration of asylum seekers, Polish language lessons and lessons on the Polish culture were provided.
94. Support for families in difficulties was provided through the system of measures to help them re-establish their ability to take care of their child. It was governed by the 2011 Act on Support for Family and Alternative Care. There was a range of services provided in cash to support family income. Through the "Family 500+" programme, the rate of extreme poverty of children had fallen from 12 to 0.7 per cent and relative poverty had fallen from 28 to 10 per cent. A programme had been introduced to support families with persons with disabilities, in particular children with disabilities.
95. Under Polish law, every incident of rape was punishable. Criminal responsibility was triggered irrespective of any relationship between the perpetrator and the victim. The relevant provisions of the Criminal Code applied with no exception to marital rapes. The gender of the victim or the perpetrator had no bearing on the criminal responsibility and in prosecuting those who were guilty of the crimes.
96. The Ministry of Justice was analysing the possibility of ratifying the International Convention for the Protection of All Persons from Enforced Disappearance and incorporating the definition of torture into domestic criminal law. Furthermore, the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment was part of the Polish legal system. Therefore, although there was no definition of torture in Polish law, all acts that fell under the Convention were criminalized.
97. The National Programme of Action for Equal Treatment 2013-2016 was being evaluated, and there were plans to develop a new one. The Council for the Prevention of Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance had been dissolved in 2016, but the obligation to prevent and fight against racism, discrimination and xenophobia rested with other public bodies.

98. Concerning education on human sexuality, according to the Act on Family Planning, Protection of the Human Foetus and Conditions of Admissibility of Abortion, the principles of responsible parenthood, value of family, life in the prenatal phase and the methods and means of conscious procreation were addressed primarily in the school subject “education for family life”. Those issues were also included in other school subjects, such as nature, biology and physical education.
99. The Islamic Republic of Iran expressed concerns about discrimination and difficulties faced by Roma in different sectors, such as employment and education, and hate speech on the Internet against the Muslim community.
100. Iraq commended the appointment of equal treatment coordinators in each ministry and in the Prime Minister’s Chancellery, and of the Government Plenipotentiary for Civic Society.
101. Ireland was pleased to note that Polish law prohibited discrimination in political, social and economic life and that the Labour Code prohibited any discrimination in employment, including on grounds of sexual orientation.
102. Israel noted the contribution of the National Action Programme for Equal Treatment and the work of the special Government Plenipotentiary to fight against hate crimes.
103. Italy commended Poland for its actions to, inter alia, prevent torture, improve pretrial detention and conditions in prisons, promote children’s rights and equal treatment and prevent domestic violence.
104. Kyrgyzstan welcomed the policy to promote and protect the rights of women and children, but regretted the abolition of the Council for the Prevention of Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance.
105. Slovenia expressed its concern regarding the weak response in combating discrimination and violence on grounds of the sexual orientation and gender identity and encouraged Poland to broaden the anti-discrimination legislation.
106. Libya commended the adoption of the National Action Plan against Human Trafficking, continuous efforts to eliminate hate crimes and incitement to hatred and improvement of the situation of persons with disabilities.
107. Mexico welcomed the strengthening of the legal framework related to freedom of expression and the progress related to eliminate discrimination, including the establishment of a monitoring team and training activities.
108. Mongolia noted the constructive cooperation with the special procedures and commended Poland for the comprehensive measures it had taken aimed at preventing torture, improving the conditions in prison and enhancing the efficiency of the judicial system.
109. Montenegro called on Poland to enhance activities to eliminate the use of corporal punishment in schools, youth centres and alternative-care facilities, as reported by the Committee on the Rights of the Child.
110. The Netherlands welcomed the rejection in October 2016 of the draft amendments to the Act on Family Planning and the Penal Code. It emphasized the importance of consultations with the Venice Commission for the independence of the judiciary.
111. Norway recognized the efforts by Poland to fight discrimination and reminded Poland that an independent civil society was an important part of democratic societies.
112. Pakistan acknowledged the steps Poland had taken to ensure equal treatment and to combat discrimination and hate crimes, including the appointment of equal treatment coordinators in each ministry and the project called “migrants against hate crimes: how to enforce your rights”.
113. Peru appreciated the collaboration of Poland with the special procedures, the decrease in the cases of preventive detention and the efforts to achieve equality among men and women, which should be reinforced.

114. The Philippines lauded the improvements in women's rights, particularly with the introduction of measures to prosecute ex officio sexual offences, such as rape or coerced sexual acts.

115. The Republic of Korea appreciated the appointment of equal treatment coordinators at each level of Government and the effectiveness of the new Foreigners Act. It also recognized the appointment of the Government Plenipotentiary for Civic Society.

116. The Republic of Moldova welcomed the appointment of the Government Plenipotentiary for Civic Society, the implementation of the National Action Programme for Equal Treatment and the appointment of equal treatment coordinators in public institutions.

117. Romania expressed its appreciation for the legislative and organizational measures to improve the conditions in prisons and noted that special attention had been paid to women's rights and gender equality.

118. The Russian Federation expressed concern about the violations by Poland of its international obligations regarding the protection of cultural rights and countering racism, and the elimination of a human rights task force in the Ministry of Internal Affairs.

119. The Under-Secretary of State thanked all the delegations that had participated in the interactive dialogue and gave assurances that Poland would analyse all the recommendations with a maximum of attention. She also indicated that Poland had signed and ratified a number of international human rights instruments since the second review and that implementing them fully remained a priority for Poland. In conclusion, she stated that the historical experience of the country, which had come a long way from socialism to democracy and free-market economy, served to confirm the fact that the highest human rights standards were and should remain the path of democracy. She gave her assurances that Poland would work to guarantee that its national norms in the field of human rights would conform to the most rigorous international standards.
