It enshrines the rights to freedom of assembly, expression, the media and freedom of movement, as well as political rights. However, due to the on-going state of emergency, most freedoms – such as movement, expression and assembly – have been repressed. • Freedom of speech is guaranteed under Article 4 of the Constitution. According to Freedom House, press law 00-046 AN RM of 7 July 2000 imposes fines and prison sentences for defamation. It also criminalises offenses such as undermining state security, demoralising the armed forces, offending the head of state and consorting with the enemy.
