III. Exhaustion of domestic remedies/Application to other international procedures

We have not pursued any procedures and claims in the national courts and the European courts for human rights because we know that this is a problem that only can be solved in the United Nations, the place where this problem started with the Greece's veto and the acceptance of the Greece's procedural right to veto by the United Nations, as stronger than Article 1 – the right to self-determination (a member of the members) from the Two International Covenants on Human Rights and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

Remedies in our national system would not be effective and will not have influence on international and national level.
