Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatments in the 709 Crackdown – a Summary of Cases

(9 July 2015 – 26 June 2017)
A. Torture in the 709 Crackdown

The Chinese government became a member of the United Nations in 1945, and it ratified in 1988 the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment. In 1998, China signed the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights. The 709 Crackdown however has manifested that China has not been abide by the above conventions. It has obviously violated the international human rights standards and state obligations.

The 709 Crackdown refers to a massive suppression of human right lawyers and defenders that began on 9 July 2015. By far, 320 rights lawyers, rights defenders and their families have either been interviewed, banned from travelling out of the country, put under house arrest, residential surveillance, formally arrested or enforced disappeared. In the 709 Crackdown, the Chinese authorities, the public security organs in particular, have committed numerous acts of violations of law. They include the abusive usage of state-security-related crimes for arrests and detention, the arbitrary usage of “residential surveillance at designated location” to deprive detainees the rights to meet their families and their defence counsels and the use of media trial. Amongst all, the most outrageous violation has been the use of torture, inhuman or degrading treatments to extract confession.

This report documents the testimonies of victims of torture, inhuman or degrading treatments in the 709 Crackdown that have been received by the China Human Rights Lawyers Concern Group (CHRLCG) and also information CHRLCG received from sources deemed credible. This included information of 14 human rights lawyers and rights defenders. Given the constraints in time and resources, CHRLCG has not been able to conduct a more extensive survey. The current findings may represent only tip of the iceberg regarding the issue. This report notes that at least 15 types of torture or inhuman or degrading treatments have been employed by the Chinese authorities against the lawyers or defenders held in the crackdown, of which 10 intended to inflict physical harm (including beating, forced wearing of metal chains/bars that confine victims at stress position for prolonged hours, extended period of fixation of posture with even the slightest body movement forbidden, extended period of enforced sitting on stacked up stools with legs dangling, electronic shocks, cigarette smoke puffed into eyes and noses of non-smokers, fatigue interrogation, sleep deprivation, deprivation of medical treatment in need, enforced medication and prescription of unknown drugs and deprivation of daily necessities); and 5 working to create psychological and mental detriment (including solitary confinement, social isolation, intimidation, language abuses and enforced psychological counselling). For the current documentation, torture has been used 44 times. It is noted that the authorities have been using “enforced medication” more extensively in the 709 Crackdown when compared to what happened in the past.¹

Multiple government organs, including 6 local level detention centres, 5 local level public security bureaus, 1 local level prison and the “709 taskforce” with unclear background, are known to have applied torture on rights lawyers and rights defenders. Among the 14 victims surveyed in this report, over half confirmed themselves to be tortured during the “residential surveillance at designated location” (RSDL) when they were in a stage of enforced disappearance with a number of their basic rights deprived. The tortures commonly applied during the time of RSDL are: beating, fatigue interrogation, deprivation of sleep, forced medication, solitary confinement.

¹ At least 6 rights lawyers and rights defenders were instructed or forced to take unknown medication provided by the detention centres where they were or apparently by medical staff from neighboring hospital. According to our record, some individuals have developed negative symptoms or reactions, both physically and mentally, after taking the drug. (see details in charts here below)

In some of the cases, prescription was made without pre-examination of the health condition of the victims, in some others; victims were given the drugs allegedly for some disease/illness that they knew they did not have. But in most of the cases, victims were forced to or instructed to take the drugs, without full knowledge about the drugs and how they would possibly affect their health condition. Situation hence has remained strongly dubious, and on which should warrant an independent inquiry.

Since the drugs provided to different people are reportedly different in shape, colour and dosage size, it is difficult for us to make simple and direct causal relations between the drugs taking and the symptoms noted; it remains difficult to conclude on the types of the drugs and the authorities’ purpose of prescribing them.

Currently, there is no clear provision in international human rights law to prohibit forced medication or to count the act as torture. However, we understand that for many governments, including the EU and in UK for instances, their health authorities do take it as part of the patient’s rights to accept or reject certain medical treatment. The Chinese government’s act of enforcing medication is apparently violating the detained lawyers and defenders’ rights to know and to consent/decide for medication.
B. Definition of Torture and other Cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment

International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights

Article 7
No one shall be subjected to torture or to cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment. In particular, no one shall be subjected without his free consent to medical or scientific experimentation.

Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment

Article 1
For the purposes of this Convention, the term "torture" means any act by which severe pain or suffering, whether physical or mental, is intentionally inflicted on a person for such purposes as obtaining from him or a third person information or a confession, punishing him for an act he or a third person has committed or is suspected of having committed, or intimidated or coercing him or a third person, or for any reason based on discrimination of any kind, when such pain or suffering is inflicted by or at the instigation of or with the consent or acquiescence of a public official or other person acting in an official capacity. It does not include pain or suffering arising only from, inherent in or incidental to lawful sanctions.
