Follow-up to the Universal Periodic Review
Information for NGOs

The Universal Periodic Review (UPR) is a Human Rights Council (HRC) review mechanism of the overall human rights situation in each UN Member State, conducted by all UN Member States. After its review, each State is expected to implement the UPR recommendations it receives, in particular those which it accepts, as well as the voluntary commitments it makes. The recommendations and voluntary commitments are known as the UPR outcome.

What is follow-up in the UPR context?

UPR follow-up refers to all the activities NGOs may undertake to ensure that States implement their “UPR outcome” before their next UPR review 4½ years later.

Why should NGOs engage in follow-up?

To improve the human rights situation on the ground, it is essential that NGOs systematically follow up on progress made by the State regarding UPR outcomes.

1. To know and let people know about the human rights issues that their State has been told to focus on at international level: National civil society actors do not often know about recommendations from international processes, like UPR outcomes, even when these recommendations address national issues relevant to their work. Victims are often unaware of recommendations that are relevant to their situations. NGOs can increase awareness about UPR outcomes and bring them up in national discussions.

2. To make their work more effective: In many cases, NGOs already work on issues that are addressed in the UPR of their States. NGOs can strengthen their arguments and advocacy by referring to and monitoring the implementation of UPR outcomes.

3. To hold States accountable: While States are responsible for implementing UPR outcomes, NGOs can play a critical role by monitoring State actions and reminding them of their commitments.

4. To help States with implementation: Follow-up is also an opportunity for NGOs to offer their expertise to States through consultations or reports and to assist with implementation of UPR outcomes.

5. To make the UPR process more effective: By ensuring continuous pressure on States, follow-up activities can result in higher rates of implementation of outcomes. As a result, the UPR can help improve the human rights situation on the ground. NGOs’ monitoring of the implementation phase also provides information for subsequent UPR reviews.

IMPORTANT NOTE

States under Review cannot reject UPR recommendations

Contrary to what is often said, a “State under Review” (SuR) cannot technically “reject” UPR recommendations. It can only indicate which recommendations “enjoy the State’s support” and which ones are “noted”. The only difference between the two is that when an SuR indicates that a recommendation enjoys its support, it makes a political commitment to implement that recommendation before the next review. Nonetheless, the State can always decide to implement noted recommendations at a later stage. During the first UPR cycle, 19% of noted recommendations were implemented; hence the importance of maintaining a dialogue about noted recommendations with the State. The UPR mechanism cannot be used to dismiss a human rights issue or concern.

1 See Fact sheet No.1 The Universal Periodic Review for more information.
What kind of follow-up activities can NGOs undertake?

Depending on the resources, capacities and interests of each NGO, follow-up can include a range of activities and take place at national and/or international levels.

There are a number of possible follow-up activities. As a minimum, NGOs are encouraged to find out about the UPR of their State and its outcomes and to share this information with others. If more resources are available, NGOs can engage in monitoring and reporting the progress made in the implementation of UPR outcomes.

STEP 1: Find out and share information about UPR outcomes

Where can UPR outcomes be found?

- Recommendations made to the State reviewed can be found in the UPR Working Group report issued after the UPR of the State and any addendums to this report.
- Written responses and oral comments made by the State reviewed about the recommendations received can be found in the Addendum to the UPR Working Group report and in the Report of the HRC session, in which the UPR Working Group report of the State reviewed was adopted.
- Voluntary commitments made by States reviewed can be found in several places: the national UPR report, the UPR Working Group report, any addendums to this report; and in the initial and concluding statements the State made during the HRC plenary session, in which its UPR Working Group report was adopted.

All of the above documents can be found at: http://www.ohchr.org/EN/HRBodies/UPR/Pages/Documentation.aspx and at: http://www.upr-info.org

NATIONAL LEVEL

Find out about the UPR and its outcomes

At any time

Knowing what commitments States make at the international level helps you advocate for change at national level.

INTERNATIONAL LEVEL

Raise awareness and disseminate information about the UPR

Right after the UPR of your State/at any time

Inform the general public and the key actors in your country (like parliamentarians or ministers) about UPR recommendations, especially those that are accepted. Reach out by translating the recommendations and commitments into the local language and/or producing a plain English version.

Communicate with the media

On or before symbolic days/at any time

Use symbolic days, like Human Rights Day, to attract and sustain media and public attention. Reach out with press releases and follow up regularly through articles, blogs, events, etc.

Refer to UPR outcomes where relevant

At any time

Refer to outcomes in alternative reports to relevant UN treaty bodies or Special Procedures. Highlight if ‘noted’ recommendations come from, or coincide with, recommendations made by that treaty body. You can also raise UPR outcomes in relevant international forums, such as humanitarian forums or the World Health Assembly.
STEP 2: Monitor and report on progress

Helping your State translate a UPR outcome into action

For each recommendation or voluntary commitment you are interested in monitoring, you can make suggestions about the results expected, the types of action required (political, legislative, allocation or increase of resources, etc.), the actors that should be involved and a timetable to achieve them by the next State review.¹

Develop your own action plan

5–24 months after the review

Translate UPR outcomes into step-by-step activities and develop a suggested timetable for implementation. This document will serve as the basis of your UPR follow-up discussions with the State.

Collaborate with the State

5 months after the review – onwards

Contact the relevant ministries/government departments to know about their implementation plans and look for possible areas of collaboration. These could include participating in a multi-sectorial implementation committee (if the government is creating one) or helping draft a State action plan.

Maintain a dialogue with the State about ‘noted’ recommendations. Find out the State’s position on them and how progress can be made in that area.⁴

INTERNATIONAL LEVEL

Take stock of progress

Regularly/especially 24–30 months after the review

Monitor and report on the implementation status of the UPR outcomes periodically. Disseminate your findings to key partners and government representatives. This can be done in several ways such as an annual report or an annual meeting where State representatives could be invited. Use milestones to maintain momentum between reviews and with the media/general public. Produce a mid-term report on the progress made and encourage the State to produce its own mid-term report and submit it to the HRC.

Encourage bilateral follow-up between States

5 months after the review – onwards

Encourage the States – either through their embassies in your country or through their UN permanent missions in Geneva – that made recommendations to follow up directly with the State reviewed and update them on implementation.

INTERNATIONAL LEVEL

Engage in the next UPR

3½–4 years after the review

Prepare a written submission, engage in advocacy or do both to ensure that implementation gaps or failures are addressed.⁵

During the next UPR, reiterate past recommendations or commitments that were not implemented.

NATIONAL LEVEL

Use international opportunities to report on progress

Any HRC session/especially 24–30 months after the review

Report to the HRC by way of a written statement, an oral statement or by organising a side event.

Monitor progress

5 months after the review – onwards

Monitoring and reporting on progress made by the government maintains the momentum between UPR reviews and contributes to implementation.

¹ For ideas, model matrices and plans that you could encourage your State to use, see the guide for States produced by the International Organisation de la Francophonie, based on good practices in implementing UPR recommendations, which is available here: www.francophonie.org/IMG/pdf/oif_practical_guide_web.pdf.

⁴ Noted recommendations can always be accepted and/or implemented after the State’s review. See text box on page 1.

Who are the key partners for effective follow-up?

Don’t work alone!

At each step of the process, do not forget to consult and engage with partners, especially other human rights NGOs and/or coalitions. You will be more effective if you share activities and responsibilities. Additionally, your follow-up advocacy strategy will be more comprehensive and have more chances of including all important milestones and opportunities, such as entry points with other human rights mechanisms, especially treaty bodies and special procedures.

- The State and relevant ministries
  A coordinating body or focal point within the State structure, such as the Ministries of Foreign Affairs or Justice, should assign the responsibility of examining and implementing recommendations to relevant ministries. Liaising directly with government representatives in those ministries will help you to develop partnerships with the government during the implementation phase.

- Parliamentarians
  Many recommendations will require the passing of new laws or ratifying treaties to be implemented. Individual parliamentarians, as well as thematic subgroups or committees, can propose draft laws that will ensure such implementation and may also include your suggestions for implementation.

- National Human Rights Institution
  A National Human Rights Institution (NHRI) usually has the mandate to monitor UPR outcomes and often acts as a facilitator in the consultation processes conducted by the State. It can help you to access the government and provide you with assistance in the monitoring phase.

- Partner NGOs
  Follow-up will be more feasible and comprehensive if you conduct it with partners. Working together can also increase your authority and legitimacy during discussions with your government.

- Media
  Using the media can help to ensure that the issues discussed during UPR stay high on the agenda of the government and are known by the general public. This can help you to voice your suggestions for implementation and hold your State accountable.

- States that made recommendations to your State
  States that previously made recommendations on the same – or similar – issues may be interested in providing political or financial support for follow-up activities or raising these issues in bilateral talks with your State. You should reach out to their embassies in your State or UN missions in Geneva.

- UN bodies and agencies
  UN bodies and agencies may have a role to play in the implementation of UPR recommendations and may assist you directly or by building the capacity of the State. For example, the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) is mandated to promote and protect the enjoyment and full realization of human rights in all States. It can support the follow-up and implementation of UPR recommendations and receive requests for technical assistance from States. OHCHR country or regional offices may be particularly useful partners. The United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) can also support countries to follow up on recommendations and help to engage civil society organisations in their monitoring. UNICEF and UNHCR are other key partners for follow-up on UPR recommendations.

- UPR Info and Child Rights Connect
  You can contact us for any guidance on follow-up and to know more about international opportunities to report on progress made.

DON’T FORGET: This is a list of possible partners. Before making contact, assess whether you have, or can safely establish, working relationships with these potential partners and clearly understand their political role and positions. It is important that partners share similar views on overall goals.

Using the UN Human Rights Council to report on progress

NGOs with consultative status with the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations (referred to as “ECOSOC status”) can officially engage in follow-up activities at the UN Human Rights Council (HRC).

NGOs that do not have the status can still engage in these activities, with support from an NGO with ECOSOC status. Contact Child Rights Connect and/or UPR Info for more information about this possibility.

How can an NGO report on progress in implementation at the HRC?

At any time, from the adoption of the UPR outcome report of the State until its next UPR, NGOs can report to the HRC on the progress made in the implementation of a UPR outcome. This can be done by way of a written or oral statement or by organising a side event.

Oral and written statements

At any HRC session, a general debate on the UPR is held under item 6 of the agenda, after the adoption of all the UPR reports. During this time, NGOs with ECOSOC status can raise concerns about the UPR of any State or report on the implementation of UPR recommendations in a given State through a 2-minute oral statement and/or a written statement.1

Oral statements can be a way to comment on the State’s implementation, or lack of implementation, of the UPR outcomes in general or focus on specific recommendations. They can also be used to comment on the cooperation between civil society and the State in the implementation phase or any other issue relevant to the State’s UPR outcome.

An oral statement:
- is delivered before the HRC and is heard by diplomats and other NGOs;
- is webcasted and can be watched live or at any point afterwards;
- is limited in time to two minutes.

However, an oral statement is limited in time to two minutes.

A written statement:
- is sent by email to the UN at hrcngo@ohchr.org;
- gets an official UN reference number and is uploaded onto the UN website;
- can be longer than the oral one and can therefore provide additional and complementary information not delivered due to time constraints.

However, written statements receive less attention than oral statements.

Should an NGO present an oral or a written statement?

NGOs can use both options to maximise their impact. For example, during the adoption of the UPR report of Bahrain, the Cairo Institute for Human Rights Studies made reference to its written statement during its oral one, indicating that it contained further information.

Side events

During any HRC or UPR session, NGOs with ECOSOC status can book a room in the UN Palais des Nations, where the sessions are held in Geneva, Switzerland, to organise their own events.

These ‘side events’, which run parallel to the HRC or UPR session, usually last 2 hours and take place during the lunch break, between 12:00 and 15:00. They are a good opportunity for NGOs to launch reports and present thematic or country issues. NGOs have used this option to present mid-term assessments of the implementation of UPR outcomes in their countries, to comment on the UPR of a specific country or to focus on some specific UPR recommendations and how they should be implemented.

These rooms should be requested on-line in advance of the session.2
